PAPER 542.

THE OPENING ADDRESS.

By C. Gerald Eve (President).

As the fiftieth President in the sixty-fourth year from the founding of The Institution it is not possible to find fresh expressions with which to thank its members for the great honour they have done me in electing me to the Chair. I can say no more than that it is my earnest desire to discharge my duties in the manner best calculated to uphold the interests of our profession, and in doing so to maintain the high and honourable tradition of my predecessors.

It would be idle to pretend that I entered upon my responsible office as representative head of so great a professional society without diffidence and misgiving. But with your forbearance and good will and with the support of my colleagues on the Council, which has been so ungrudgingly bestowed on my predecessors and which I feel assured will equally be extended to the present occupant of the Chair, I shall hope to hand over my office at the end of the year without having seriously impaired those traditions.

I believe I am the first prizeman of The Institution who has reached this position, but I have always been satisfied in my own mind that the examiner in question must have had but a nodding acquaintance with his subject.

CHARTERED SURVEYORS AND THE DEPRESSION.

In the present time of unparalleled depression at home and abroad, and of heavy national taxation, the call for economy has tended to divert our profession from its creative work of reconstruction, improvement and progress, and to confine it to the less fruitful, though necessary, task of helping in the endeavour to meet and overcome the financial stringency. The surveyor can no longer obtain funds with which to improve agricultural estates by land drainage, improved buildings, afforestation, and similar works ; instead he is engaged in arranging mortgages, cutting down necessary repairs, reducing staffs, and in examining and putting into operation all possible economies.

The halt which was called a year ago in the erection of public works and buildings had its immediate repercussion on private enterprise in that field, and the business of the building and quantity surveyor has since been largely confined to works of maintenance and repair. Land which was to have been taken for public improvements is no longer required, and the surveyor is engaged in settling compensation, not for the taking of land, but for the loss caused by withdrawals of notices to treat. The forester tries to find more timber for sale instead of replanting areas clear cut during the War. Instead of selling or letting country mansions as such, the surveyor pulls them down and sells the materials. Farming does not pay ; agricultural tenants give up their holdings; the land agent with more and more farms in hand is compelled by the need for economy to confine himself merely to the preservation of his land in good heart and condition so that its intrinsic value may not too greatly deteriorate before the favourable turn of the agricultural tide arrives.

These are but a few of the more obvious examples of the diversion of our services from the field of creative and fruitful activity. Our members regard it as deplorable that so large a proportion of their professional effort has had to be turned into unproductive, or indirectly productive, channels, and that their plans for promoting the well-being of town and countryside have been rendered nugatory. But the call upon the energy and brains of the profession to find ways and means of overcoming, or at least of tiding over, the various new difficulties with which they have been faced has not been ill answered.

Many of these difficulties have been without precedent and of such a nature that the surveyor has had no previous experience at his command to guide him. But, as His Royal Highness the Duke of York was good enough to tell us, the surveyor is the handyman of the professions ; and I am confident that the more desperate the challenge, the greater will be the response and resourcefulness by which it will be met by our members.

I do not despair of a fairly early return to some degree of agricultural prosperity. This country is a small one measured by acreage, but it possesses a great population. Looking back over the centuries, there have been ups and downs in agriculture, but never yet has an " up " failed to follow a " down." Rich men would, I consider, be well advised to invest now and largely in the agricultural land of this country.

In the opinion of some, life under existing conditions has become over-civilised and too complex to endure. Other civilisations have broken down in history; and who shall say that that of the twentieth century is immune from decay, or that some indefinite number of years hence it will not be sung of Western civilisation as it was of the Assyrian:—

" We are dead, but our living was great ; we are dumb, but a song of our State Shall roam in the desert and wait with its burden of long, long ago . . . . "

When all is said, even were civilisation to "rattle back" into barbarism," the land is the rock and the mainstay of life, producing, as it does, the three essentials, food, clothing, and shelter. Astute persons quickly acted upon a realisation of this fact when the flight from the pound commenced last year ; small holdings were enquired for so that the owner might at least be secure of a livelihood without using money as a means of exchange.

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

Turning now to current matters, the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, will come into operation on the 1st April, 1933. The Council and its committees spent many anxious days considering the lines on which this legislation should proceed, and the officials of the Ministry of Health gave the most courteous attention to our suggestions for the amendment of the draft Bill which was to be introduced into Parliament. One of the most difficult points for consideration was how best to couple up the stages of town planning already commenced, but not brought to completion, under the Town Planning Act, 1925, with the new provisions of the Act of 1932. We wish this Act smooth working ; an end which can best be secured if the planning authorities realise that under present circumstances economy should be their first consideration. Neither the local public purse nor the property-owner can afford to spend much money on improvements, however desirable. It is to be hoped that for the time being town and country planning will be confined to preventing hideous erections, the spoliation of rural beauty, and other mistakes which would mar the future, and to the making of regulations that will provide the framework for future improvements when means permit. There is, however, a possible danger lest the town planning authorities, actuated by the thought that the collection of the betterment charges from landowners will largely pay for the intended improvement without recourse to public funds, may push forward such schemes with undue haste. Nowadays property-owners do not think it unfair that they should pay for betterment ; but many a property-owner to-day cannot afford the improvement, or if he could afford it, he may anxiously prefer a domestic improvement, such as a bathroom, to the amenity of a new public park near his house.

With co-operation between owners and the authorities at the earliest stage of town planning, and continued throughout the later stages, much can be done without expense in the pressing matter of preserving the aspect of our countryside. But hostility and opposition on the part of owners must inevitably arise unless economy is put in the forefront.

The new Town Planning Act is, almost of necessity, extremely complicated and requires prolonged study, the compensation clauses in particular. Until, however, the Ministry of Health have, at the end of the calendar year, issued their regulations, no complete study is possible or profitable. In this connection I may say that the Council have arranged for an explanatory Memorandum of the Act as affecting the practice of a surveyor to be prepared by Counsel, and this will be available early in the new year.

The Official Arbitrators—members of The Institution—appointed under the Acquisition of Land Act, 1919, will have thrust upon them, in addition to their present arduous duties, the burden of interpreting the compensation and betterment clauses of the Town and Country Planning Act. They have, moreover, commenced to determine disputed cases of compensation for the acquisition of permanent or semi-permanent wayleaves in respect of some of the 29,000 towers carrying the network of electric cables or “ grid ” which the Central Electricity Board is erecting over the whole country. I have no doubt but that the reputation for impartiality and judgment which they have made for themselves since 1919 will be maintained and enhanced when they tackle these fresh tasks.

The recent land tax may be said to be buried but not dead. I hope for many reasons that we may never see the day of its exhumation. I am convinced that in practice it would be impossible for a land tax in aid of State revenue to be worked in double harness with a local charge such as that imposed by the betterment clauses of the Town and Country Planning Act. Under that Act capital charges are to be levied by the local authorities in respect of betterment arising out of town planning schemes. Any levy of annual land tax in aid of the State would duplicate the local charges and eat into their amount, reducing the financial resources available for planning schemes.

THE LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT, 1927.

The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, providing for renewals of leases or compensation in the alternative, has now been in operation for a sufficient time to warrant an emphatic confirmation on my part of the opinions expressed by a former President—the late J. D. Wallis—from this Chair in 1925, namely, that questions which are mainly those of values had best be determined for the county court judge by surveyors whose ordinary practice enables them to deal with them with knowledge and authority. The county court judge is a competent and adequate tribunal for the determination of legal issues ; what remains outside those issues are questions of fact and value affecting property which should be referred for decision or report to qualified surveyors. Experience already shows that more time is occupied, and more expense occasioned to the parties, when protracted evidence on questions of value has to be brought before a referee who does not possess the experience of a surveyor ; and the parties are inclined to comment unfavourably on such procedure. I speak disinterestedly as regards our members because as a rule a larger number of them are engaged in cases where the referee is not a surveyor. With regard to the county court judges themselves, as usual, nothing but praise has been forthcoming of the manner in which they have exercised their functions under this Act.

RENT RESTRICTIONS.

The Rent Restrictions Acts urgently call for legislation on the lines of the Report of the Departmental Committee, and it will be lamentable if the present Government delay much longer in introducing an amending Bill ; there is no excuse for continuing to control, fourteen years after the end of the War, classes of houses of which the supply has now equalled the demand. Until local authorities devote such expenditure as is at their command for new houses to the erection of the very small house capable of being let at rents which can be paid by the really poor, the existing shortage of that class of house will remain, because private enterprise will of necessity continue to refrain from making provision to meet this particular shortage for the plain reason that " it does not pay." It is generally agreed that municipalities have been too prone to employ their funds in the provision of the better class of house at rents out of reach of the poorest class.

HOUSING ACT COMPENSATION.

The injustice of Section 46 of the Housing Act, 1925, formerly Section 9 of the Housing and Town Planning Act, 1919, still remains as a blot in the otherwise fair code of compensation obtaining in this country. In his Presidential Address of 1925 the late J. D. Wallis used words which I venture to quote here, because his eminence as a surveyor in compensation cases, and his experience as a former official arbitrator, gave his words especial force:—

“ This section, as so many of us know, provides that where property is compulsorily acquired for the improvement or reconstruction of an unhealthy area, the compensation for the land and buildings in the unhealthy area is to be the value of the site only, as if cleared of buildings, subject to a reduction in the compensation for the site if provision is made in the improvement scheme for the rehousing of persons of the working classes on the site when cleared . . . . I have had the opportunity as an official arbitrator of hearing a number of these cases in different towns. In some instances I have not met with any real hardship. I have, in other cases, found that business and commercial properties have been included in the insanitary area, and that persons earning their livelihood in their own premises have been deprived of any right to compensation for buildings, plant, trade fixtures, loss of business or removal, although the premises were not in themselves insanitary and were not used mainly as dwelling-houses. In such cases I have given my award with considerable reluctance and with a conviction that an amendment of the Act is urgently required.

“ The Association of Municipal Corporations have considered the section, and in the Report of their Subcommittee, dated 15th January, 1925, which Report was adopted by the Association on 25th February last, they state that the provisions of Section 9 ‘ cannot be said to be equitable to the owners, and, indeed, they appear to be so unfair that local authorities hesitate to put them into operation.’ ”

The italics above are mine. It remains a mystery why this acknowledged hardship, falling chiefly as it does on the poorer class of property-owner and on occupying tradesmen in a small way of business, has not received the active attention it deserves at the hands of our legislators.

DEATH DUTIES AND THE LAND.

Death duties continue to press unduly on landed property. It was said, with some reason, that death duties were but income tax deferred ; but now that income tax and sur-tax have been raised to a level which exhausts so large a proportion of the real net income (which differs widely in many cases from the taxable income) of the property-owner, there is little or nothing left out of which to find this "deferred income tax" on the occasion of death.

It behoves our members to see that the principal value for estate duty does not exceed the amount which the property might be expected to realise in the open market at the date of the death, particularly in the case of properties such as farms, of which the selling value has now become seriously reduced.

It is unfortunately the case that the estates of many deceased persons are not referred to surveyors for valuation. Executors, or more often their solicitors, prefer to negotiate the values with the district valuer, Inland Revenue, with the natural result that, with an expert valuer on one side and none on the other, over-valuation occurs and too much is paid in estate duty. This procedure is the more surprising now that the rates of estate duty are so heavy.

The definition of "principal value for estate duty," namely, the amount which the property might be expected to realise at the date of the death of the deceased, is further qualified by the following words in Section 60 (2) of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910:—

" . . . . and shall not make any reduction in the estimate on account of the estimate being made on the assumption that the whole property is to be placed on the market at one and the same time."

I regard this qualification as unjust because it hypothesises a value which cannot in fact actually be realised for the property. In other words, the principal value is made to exceed the present amount realisable in the market.

When a estate of, say, 7,000 acres is offered in the market, in suitable lots, it is within the experience of all of us that frequently some of the lots do not sell ; there seems to be no demand. If, however, the surveyor to the executors agrees with the district valuer that £280,000 is the amount of the expected realisation, or aggregate of the expected sale prices if all the lots sell, and if they also agree, or could agree, that 5 per cent., or £14,000, would not be realised at or within a reasonable time after the sale, nevertheless the Inland Revenue, relying upon the "flooded market" clause, refuse, probably quite legally, to make any deduction towards or in respect of the £14,000. Clearly, however, if the £14,000 can only be realised by waiting, say, 5 years, the present value is much less than £14,000.

This injustice is magnified in cases where the death is that of an owner of large territories in one county or two adjoining counties. To realise 60,000 acres at reasonable and prudent prices would obviously take some years. If an attempt were made to offer the whole at one time and so to flood the market, flood-prices only would be obtained. Yet the law requires that the principal value for death duties is to be, not the present value of the reasonable prices obtainable, and only obtainable, by taking time to sell, but the ultimate sale prices in full, with no discount to bring them down to terms of present value.

An additional injustice is that the death duties on those higher values are payable at the time, and if spread over a term of years are made to bear interest. In short, the Inland Revenue are entitled to say to the executors "You can sell for £100 now, or £130 in five years' time; pay duty on £130; if you want time to pay, then interest starts against you, at once, and on the £130."

I hope that the various societies and institutions concerned with landed property will press for amending legislation by way of expunging the "flooded market" section from the Statute Book.

LOCAL TAXATION.

Uniformity.

The revaluation of the whole country (excluding the metropolis) for rating purposes, which came into operation, for the most part, on 1st April, 1929, has certainly tended towards a more uniform valuation, i.e., a valuation fairer inter se among the ratepayers of a county. This movement towards uniformity is largely due to the work of the Central Valuation Committee and the ready acceptance on the part of rating authorities of the recommendations which they received from that Committee.

The second revaluation is now commencing, and will come into force for rates on 1st April, 1934.

In the interregnum much has been done to improve the first revaluation by the amendments which have been made as a result of proposals by rating authorities and ratepayers. Nevertheless, the present valuation lists throughout the country are still far from perfect ; nor has the old device (of avoiding a fair share of payment towards the county expenses) employed by rating authorities in the past, died out. There are still some areas which are grossly under-assessed as compared with other areas in the same county, the under-assessment being actuated by the motive mentioned above.

The remedy for this lies, of course, in the hands of the County Valuation Committees and their county valuer, who have power to object to these under-assessments before the assessment committees, and thence by appeal to Quarter Sessions. Many counties handicapped themselves in this direction either by not appointing a county valuer, or by appointing him too late to attack the first revaluation at the time of its deposit, or within a reasonable time thereafter.

There are practical, if not legal, difficulties in the way of a county valuer dealing with parts of an under-assessed area, or with only one such rating area out of several. To deal with them simultaneously is generally beyond the powers (measured in time) of the county valuer and his staff, as well as of the assessment committee and Quarter Sessions.

But in connection with the second general revaluation which will be deposited in the spring or summer of 1933, it is to be hoped that the county valuers will devote themselves entirely to the task of promoting real uniformity in the valuation of all rating areas within a county, and not exhaust their time and energy in themselves valuing certain limited classes of hereditament.

County valuation committees were initiated under the Rating Act of 1925 for the very purpose of promoting uniformity of valuation within the county. No other authority can exercise the powers they have in this direction; unless, therefore, these committees actively pursue their statutory duty, the present lack of uniformity as between areas within a county will continue or, indeed, increase. I am strongly of the opinion, therefore, that the work of the county valuer should be entirely devoted to the promotion of uniformity to the exclusion of all other. Nothing causes more discontent among ratepayers than a sense of unfairness; they are generally ready to bear their burden provided that all others within the county are equally called upon so to do.

Courts of Quarter Sessions appreciate the importance of obtaining uniformity within each county.

A tendency, however, has been observed among some assessment committees to allow their decisions to be governed too much by their regard for the interests of the area over which they rule to the detriment of the interests of the county as a whole. Where rating authorities deposit valuation lists which are below true values, good will and co-operation between assessment committees and county valuation committees are essential to provide the remedy so as to secure county uniformity.

If the law and procedure at the command of the county valuation committee break down at and just after the coming revaluation, fresh legislation will be necessary, probably on the lines of making the county the sole rating authority responsible for preparing valuation lists; a remedy which, personally, I should deplore on the twofold ground of the greater expense involved and the loss of that valuable local knowledge which members of rating authorities possess.

With regard to assessment committees, those serving thereon have devoted many days, weeks and even months to their arduous duties without any remuneration other than the gratitude, generally unexpressed, of their fellow-citizens. The members of these committees are not, as a rule, experts, but, as I have said elsewhere, they do possess a fund of invaluable "horse-sense" and a robust and ready appreciation of the general fitness of things. They are not easily led away by unsound arguments and theories ; in short, they do not make serious mistakes however well one side may be represented as compared with the other.

Impartiality.

It would be well, however, if some assessment committees were to avoid any semblance of a ground for complaint that they were not exercising their functions with absolute impartiality. I refer in particular to instances where they confer with the rating authority's representative just before hearing the ratepayer ; or where the county valuer has practically been adopted as their assessor and sits with them while they consider their decisions, and this in spite of the fact that the county valuer has been a party in some of the cases.

Economy in Cost of Appeals.

Many assessment committees now call in a surveyor in private practice to sit with them while they hear evidence and call for his advice before giving their decisions ; frequently the committees arrange a special day for hearing difficult cases and dispense with their surveyor on the other days. The economical result has been that appeals to Quarter Sessions have been avoided.

Much might be done in the better arranging of timetables so as to avoid the many hours of waiting inflicted upon ratepayers attending to present their cases ; complaints are almost universal on this point.

An appeal to Quarter Sessions is a costly remedy and beyond the means of the small ratepayer, who is thus in effect denied justice.

The Rating and Valuation Act of 1925 made attempts at reducing cost by permitting the appearance of solicitors instead of counsel in cases of hereditaments below a certain value ; also by permitting arbitration if both parties agreed. But if the authority concerned employ counsel, the ratepayer feels compelled to do likewise for fear of being out-weighted ; while, with regard to arbitration, one remembers cases where the ratepayer has desired it and the authority with the longer purse and with public funds at its disposal has refused it, to the intent that the ratepayers generally should not be encouraged to appeal but should realise that appeals will be kept expensive.

I consider that if the net annual value of a hereditament which is the subject of an appeal is below a certain limit, then either side should have the absolute right to require the question to be determined by a single arbitrator, who should have discretion as to the number of witnesses each party should call and whether counsel should be permitted. It may well be the case that a right to arbitration should be extended beyond such cases as just mentioned. That it should still be necessary to attempt, figuratively speaking, to bring a property with its facts and surroundings into court by means of plans, photographs and other pictorial evidence, together with schedules of description and measurements, instead of simply bringing an arbitrator to the property, seem archaic indeed. I wonder what would be said if we put back the clock and reverted in compensation cases (e.g., acquisition of land) to the one-time appearances and production of evidence before the under-sheriff and jury, and abandoned the present expeditious procedure whereby the official or other arbitrator thoroughly views and inspects the property ! I cannot but think that in course of time the modern method of deciding disputes upon capital values will be adopted for deciding disputes as to annual values.

I should like to add that where Quarter Sessions are presided over by recorders the property concerned is local and not distant from the court, and the learned recorder is generally good enough to view; consequently, further powers for arbitration are not needed in such districts.

The work of valuation for the quinquennial general revaluations of the country is, as was generally expected, tending to get more into the hands of surveyors and others in the whole-time employment of the rating authorities ; there can be no objection to this provided that the skilled work of actual valuation is done by surveyors and not " by others." Where it is done " by others " it is rather a hardship upon the ratepayers, county valuation committee, and assessment committees, who are put to the trouble and expense of objecting and arriving at proper values.

Probably the greatest change observed by our members generally in the making of valuations for rating is the prominence and weight that has been given to measurements ; so much so that there is a danger, of the replacement of valuation by mensuration, of persons being rated, not according to the annual value, but on a "foot rule and square foot" basis. Measurements are useful in valuation, and for the purpose of comparison almost a necessity in many cases, but there is a consensus of opinion that there is a tendency insufficiently to consider the characteristics of and variations in houses and shops after the flat rate per square foot has been applied. The skilled opinion of a surveyor after study of the features of a property is preferable to a too-blind adherence to flat rate per square foot, while the values of properties such as country mansions probably vary in inverse ratio to their size.

The Principal of Equality.

The recent case known as the Ladies' Hosiery Case is one of the most important decisions that we have had for many years in connection with rating. There was a school of thought which contended that where a ratepayer admitted that his own occupation was properly assessed at the reasonably expected rent, nevertheless, if by searching diligently or otherwise he could find a few somewhat similar properties to be under-assessed, he was entitled in law to have his assessment dragged down to the tone or level of the incorrect assessments. The High Court and Court of Appeal have now effectually quashed this doctrine. The result of this case is, however, to make it more incumbent than ever on rating authorities to prepare their second valuation list with equity and uniformity, and at the true annual values, namely, the reasonably expected rents.

The Ladies' Hosiery Case has not in any way weakened the case law whereby a valuation list will be held to be bad or a rate made thereon quashed if such list be unfair, for example, where properties of the same class are valued on different principles, and so forth. The decision in this case, therefore, does not give a licence for the preparation of inequitable valuation lists.

A legal problem of current interest is whether the county valuation committees are or are not in order in making proposals to have a valuation list amended if they seek so to do in stages and not simultaneously ; for instance, whether a county valuation committee must, when making proposals to deal with a single class of hereditaments in one rating area, make all such proposals during the currency of one rate or may spread them over two or more rates. Or again, whether such committees must make such proposals over the whole county at one and the same time during the same rate. While it is not for me as a surveyor to give an opinion, it is obvious that if a county valuer is to fire off all his guns over the whole county area simultaneously or during the same rate, then the pressure on his office might be enormous and require a large increase in staff. The simultaneous pressure on assessment committees and the rating appeals committee of Quarter Sessions would also be overwhelming.

THE SECRETARYSHIP.

Turning now to the domestic concerns of our Institution, within my year of office falls the day on which our Secretary, Mr. Alexander Goddard, will enter into his well-earned retirement.

For 37 years Julian Rogers—a name that will ever be remembered in our annals—served us as Secretary ; for 27 years Alexander Goddard—a name that will equally be remembered—has occupied that office. So in all our 64 years this Institution has had but two Secretaries. Fortunate have we been, not only in having but two changes in office, but in the characters and attainments of these two persons. This is neither the time when, nor the occasion upon which, the Council and members will formally and officially endeavour to make Mr. Goddard realise our real and sincere appreciation of the fine work he has done for The Institution, and of the personal regard he has earned from each of us. But the annual Address of the President would have been incomplete in the absence of any reference to his coming retirement.

In 1869, when Julian Rogers became Secretary, the total membership was 202 ; when he retired 36 years later in 1905, it was 3,719 ; while, in this present year of Mr. Goddard's retirement, it has risen to 7,794. The honours may be said to be almost equally divided.

The new Secretary, Major Killick, has this month taken over the reins of office, while Mr. Goddard remains until the end of the calendar year in an advisory capacity. Major Killick may be assured of the welcome and good will of our members, and of their assistance and best wishes in the task that lies before him. I need hardly say that the Council on their part, in making the appointment, feel assured that they have secured a Secretary who has the will, the attainments and the ability successfully to carry on the business of this Institution. He brings with him a great reputation for administrative work.

THE CODE OF CONDUCT.

My immediate predecessor, Mr. Bidwell, made full reference, in his able Address, to the Code of conduct for observance by chartered surveyors, which was drawn up last year by the Council. But I make no apology for returning to the subject. The Code has, as the Council expected, met with general and warm approval throughout the County Branches.

There is no finer asset than a great tradition, and in Francis Bacon's words: "It is furthered by two things chiefly, by diligence and by a good name for good and fair dealing."

Membership of this Chartered Institution is open only to those who satisfy our small army of 87 examiners, and also satisfy the Council as to their practical experience. But it is not an enclosed profession like that of the barrister, solicitor, or doctor; any person can call himself and practise as a surveyor, but not a chartered surveyor. The chartered surveyor should not, and does not, wish to rest solely on his distinction as a member of the oldest and only chartered body of surveyors, but also, by the manner in which he gets his work no less than by the diligence, skill and integrity with which he does it, to prove himself worthy of that distinction at the bar of public opinion.

This Institution, in other words, stands for quality rather than quantity in its membership.

These are times of competition to secure work, and it may seem hard to the chartered surveyor to watch it falling into the hands of those who go out and seek it by unprofessional methods while he refrains from such conduct. We cannot, however, have it both ways; we cannot, while members of The Institution, pride ourselves upon the tradition, strictly professional, of our founders, upon our Royal Charters, upon our having as Patron H.M. the King, upon being the oldest of the kindred societies, and yet at the same time lower our standards by looking for work in unprofessional ways. Rather should we feel satisfied that we have done the right thing in asking our members to observe a high standard of professional ethics, in the hope and expectation that other bodies will follow where we have led the way.

For myself, I am bold enough to believe that the majority of the members of the other kindred societies, taken as a whole, are equally desirous of ridding themselves of unfair competition inter se, and would welcome some action by their governing bodies towards adopting the chartered surveyors' Code and insisting upon its strict observance. If only simultaneous action of this nature could be taken, the threatened loss of membership by resignations, which seems to be the main deterrent, would cease to be a menace to the other societies. It is to combined action of this character that I look forward with hopefulness and, indeed, confidence. It would afford the best, the fairest and the highest-minded remedy.

Mr. J. E. BIDWELL (Past-President) said he felt it a great pleasure and a real honour that, as the immediate Past-President, it fell to his lot to move a very hearty vote of thanks to the President for the striking and dignified Address which he had just delivered. He would like, as a personal friend, to congratulate Mr. Gerald Eve on his Address. With his brains and ability he took such things in his stride, whereas those who were less gifted were hard put to it to produce something adequate to the occasion. The President had done what every member had expected of him, for they all recognised that he was an acknowledged leader of the profession.

The President's training as a chartered surveyor had been, perhaps, unusually comprehensive. He began his career as a resident agent on a country estate. After that, he held for some years an important post in the Valuation Office, and now he was in London and at the head of his profession, both as a valuer and as an expert witness, who had, perhaps, as close a knowledge as anyone of those legal intricacies which all surveyors had to try to deal with in these days. He would not be charged with flattery if he said that Mr. Gerald Eve's position was comparable to that of a leader of the Bar, the securing of whose services in a case was often reckoned to be half the battle.

He was delighted to see that the President had faith in the future of agricultural land, and had had the courage to say so, with all the authority which such a statement must have as coming from the President of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution. He would like to endorse entirely what the President had said as to the future of agriculture, and he hoped his advice to rich men, to invest now and largely in agricultural land, would receive the widest publicity.

It was in no small measure due to the influence of Mr. Gerald Eve that the Ministries, and especially the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Agriculture, now regarded the advice given by the chartered surveyors as being honest and disinterested, and in no way biased by the fact that members of The Institution were in private practice. That was a very great asset to The Institution, and he thought he was right in saying that it was a plant of more or less recent growth.

The President had referred to the Town and Country Planning Act, and there would be general agreement with him in wishing well to that Act ; but the President had been wise to sound a slight note of caution to the local authorities, who were apt, perhaps, to be led away by the fact that betterment could now be claimed, and, with a view to carrying out certain desirable improvements, were apt to forget the times through which they were passing. It was not until they could really see prosperity ahead of them that such schemes as those ought, in his opinion, to be undertaken.

The President had also referred to the Landlord and Tenant Act, and to the fact that the county court judges dealt with those cases. That, unfortunately, was due to an eleventh-hour amendment to the Bill which was moved, he supposed, in vindication of the legal profession, and which brought about that result. The county court judges administered legal matters in an admirable way, but it must be recognised that cases under that Act of 1927 mainly concerned questions of value, and were questions which should be referred to a skilled arbitrator.

The President had done well to speak out about the Rent Restriction Acts. It might have been hoped the National Government would have had the moral courage to face the position. Those who were behind the scenes and who had the right to claim some knowledge of the working of those Acts realised that the time had now come when those provisions might be taken off the Statute Book. It was fear of losing votes, he was afraid, which held back the politician from supporting that movement.

On the question of death duties he thought there would be general agreement with the views which the President had expressed, and though he feared that at the present time there was little hope of getting any relief from the actual incidence of the death duties, yet the obvious injustice of Section 60 ought to be put right in the interests of fair play ; and it had been very clearly shown in the Address—he had never, he thought, seen it put more clearly—that that section was unfair in valuing a large estate for death duties.

He was glad the President had referred to the question of the Code of Conduct. In his own Presidential Address the year before, one thing which brought him trouble was the perhaps too outspoken way in which he referred to the Code of Conduct ; but, nevertheless, he felt there would be general agreement that the time had come to put forward such a Code, and that it had received the general support of the members of the profession.

At the Council meeting which had just been held, a report from the Professional Practices Committee had been considered which dealt with certain cases, some of which had been sent up to the Council and referred to that Committee as coming under the Code of Conduct. In some cases satisfactory explanations were forthcoming, and in others not ; but he thought it served a good purpose that it should be known generally that the Council intended to enforce the Code without fear or favour.

He hoped that, as the President said, other kindred societies would support the Chartered Surveyors in upholding such a Code of Conduct. It was all to the good of the profession that that should be done.

He had great pleasure in moving a most hearty vote of thanks to the President for his excellent Address.

Mr. PERCIVAL FOX TUCKETT (Senior Vice-President), in seconding the vote of thanks, said anyone who knew Mr. Gerald Eve would have anticipated the high and thoughtful character of the Address which he had delivered, and which was the sort of Address which might be anticipated from a prizeman of The Institution. In that connection he thought it must have been the President's modesty which prompted his reference to the examiner.

With regard to the question of agricultural land, personally he believed, or at least hoped, that the bottom of the depression had been reached, and that it would be possible to look forward to a gradual improvement, although he was not quite so optimistic as the President in thinking that that improvement would come about in the near future ; because, though the fall in the prices of cereals had been serious, to his mind the great fall in the price of live-stock was even more disastrous, and he did not know how many farmers would find it possible to live through another year. He hoped the President's expectations would be realised. In any case he was convinced, from previous experience when he was a young man and land was selling for next to nothing, that now was the time to buy land if a purchaser could afford and was content to receive a small return on his capital for some years.

So far as the Town and Country Planning Act was concerned, he was glad to say that local authorities were meeting owners of land and trying to come to an agreement with them over schemes, and not arousing their opposition. He felt sure that, if they continued to adopt that attitude, the compensation payable would be found to be very small, whereas if they were antagonistic they might have to pay a great deal more. He trusted, moreover, that they would not follow the example of the Central Electricity Board, and try to do within five or seven years what ought to have taken twenty-five, because the Board were, in his opinion, riding for a fall.

With regard to the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, he entirely agreed that questions of value should be left to the expert valuer, and he thought the Act had certainly proved that to be the case. He would also like to mention that, while the county court judges had acted in a most praiseworthy way in connection with the Act, he thought they might, when they fixed the rules with regard to fees, have treated surveyors with a little more consideration.

On the subject of death duties and land, if only the Government in 1894 had taken advantage of the permissive provisions empowering them to take over the land at the agreed value instead of insisting on cash, they would probably now own practically three-quarters of England, and in that case the problem of the taxation of land values would have solved itself. So long as the nation treated capital as income that was not possible, but he trusted that one day a Government would be found to make use of those permissive provisions, and treat death duties on land as capital and not income.

In conclusion, he would like again to thank the President for his most able Address.

Mr. MORDAUNT ROGERS (Chartered Surveyor), President, Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute, said he rose firstly because he was a very old member of The Institution, secondly, because Mr. Eve's family and his own had family connections in the county of Bedfordshire running back for many years. One of his ancestors had been a parson farmer in Bedfordshire, of the name of Benjamin Rogers, and extracts from his diaries, starting from the coronation of George II., had been published in the Countryman. Some of the items in those diaries, with regard to agriculture and other matters, were most entertaining.

The third, and most particular reason why he wished to say a few words, was because at the moment he was President of the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute. He wanted to bring his congratulations and greeting on behalf of his Council and the 6,500 members of the Institute, many of whom were, of course, like himself, also members of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution.

He thoroughly agreed with what the President had said as to assessments and the uniformity of assessments, and that, just as the official arbitrators went and viewed the properties about which they were going to hear evidence, so he felt ought counsel, in assessment committee cases, to view the properties ; and he thought that should also be done in compensation cases. He had often been called as a witness in compensation cases where counsel did not know the property, and certain questions had been put to him by counsel which were awkward and could not be satisfactorily answered in the witness-box.

He wanted particularly to stress the point of co-operation between the two Institutions. Only recently the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute had held a conference, and formed a little deputation to interview certain gentlemen of the Law Society. It so happened that the present president of the Law Society (Mr. C. E. Barry) and himself were educated at the same school. At their old school club dinner they were both official guests, and sat next to each other, and he had therefore the opportunity of talking to him about what might perhaps be called " mutual encroachments." When he visited the Bristol Branch, the president of the Law Society, who practises in that town, sat at luncheon between Mr. Blake (Secretary of the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute) and himself, and the result was the little conference which was held a week ago, and from which he thought a great deal of good would come, especially if the members of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution would co-operate.

They had discussed with the president of the Law Society and his colleagues the question of probate valuations, and the solicitors explained to them that it was the clients who asked them to try to settle figures with the district valuers. Many of their clients thought that possibly it was better to pay extra duty on £100 or so rather than incur the expense of a surveyor. Some of the solicitors present at the conference spoke to him afterwards, and said that if the scale of charges were adjusted to meet that case, considerably more business might come to the profession.

With regard to the question of the Code of conduct, the President had expressed the view that the Chartered Surveyors' Institution was leading the way. Personally he was not quite certain whether that was correct. He felt in a sense that he was a Jekyll of The Institution and a Hyde of the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute, but at the same time he would like to point out that the latter body had published a Code two years ago, and had been considering the matter further for some months, and had worked out a code of practice which he thought would go far beyond the Code which The Chartered Surveyors' Institution printed a year ago. He felt that co-operation between the two bodies was very desirable, and if that were brought about and other kindred societies were persuaded to come in and work for those high ideals, a great step forward would have been taken ; and he hoped that would come about during Mr. Gerald Eve's term of office and his own.

Once again he would like to congratulate the President on a very able Address.

The vote of thanks was then put by Mr. J. E. BIDWELL, and carried with acclamation.

The PRESIDENT, in reply, said he was very much obliged to the meeting for their vote of thanks, and to the speakers who had said such kind but, he was afraid, quite undeserved things about him.

The proceedings then terminated.

PRESENTATION TO MR. ALEXANDER GODDARD, C.B.E.

The PRESIDENT: Mr. Alexander Goddard, as representing every one of the 7,800 members of this Institution, whether at home or abroad, from the senior Past-President down to the last-joined student, I am going to attempt to convey to you some measure of our real gratitude to you for your able and loyal service as our Secretary during the past twenty-seven years. (Applause.)

You have served us wisely, faithfully and well. You have fashioned our progress ; you have shaped our ends. All about us is the result of your work. You have writ your annals large upon our records. In the execution of your duties, your most distinguishing characteristics have been your courtesy, your tact, your patience, your confidence, your literary ability, and, last but not least, that rare gift, a right judgment in all things. (Applause.) Without fear, favour or affection, in your calm and serene way, you have always said and done that which seemed to you right, turning neither to the right hand nor to the left.

Successive Councils, during the past twenty-seven years, have increasingly reposed in you a confidence which has resulted from their experience of the soundness, the invariable soundness, of your judgment and advice. Like an ideal secretary, you have led whilst seeming to advise.

To each member of this Institution, whether a senior or junior member, invariably have you extended equal justice, the same consideration, the same personal human kindness, and have taken the same trouble over his affairs ; so much so that each member has felt, when he has entered your room for advice, that he possesses in you a real and sincere friend to aid and assist him in his professional career. (Applause.)

In your retirement, therefore, will you remember that by each one of us it will be said of you " He was my friend, " faithful and just to me." The wheel of your professional life has turned full circle. You are going into retirement from your active life, but you are indeed fortunate, because to few is it given, as it is to you, to retire in the full possession of good health ; to be able to look back in the twilight of your days to a life full of useful work, and acclaimed at all hands to have been a really fine work ; to have known and helped such an immense number of one's fellow-beings; to be accorded and take away with you in so full a measure the gratitude, the respect, and, indeed, the affection of those whom you have served.

We know that you, on your part, have and will ever keep a large place in your heart for The Chartered Surveyors' Institution, and we feel that, if ever an emergency were to arise, or a calamity befall us, and we brought you into our counsel and asked for your advice, it would be readily and wisely given.

I have here a telegram which has just arrived from Scotland and which I will read :—

" All Scottish members join in thanking Mr. Goddard for all that he has done for them as their guide, philosopher and friend, and wish him health and happiness in his well-earned retiral. — Chairman, Scottish Branch.”

(Applause.) From our Irish Branch there came this letter this morning:—

“ His well-earned retirement will be a great loss to The Institution, which largely owes its success to his great work. We of the Irish Branch can never forget the yeoman work he did for us, especially at the critical period at the passing of the 1903 Land Act, when the claims of Irish surveyors first gained recognition by the Legislature, after a most strenuous fight in the teeth of what appeared at the time to be overwhelming opposition.”

(Applause.) It now remains for me to wish you and Mrs. Goddard—(applause)—whom we are so pleased to see here as well—(applause)—many years of happiness, good health, and full enjoyment of your leisure. No more could be wished anyone.

The Council have decided that The Institution shall have your portrait painted and hung on these walls, in order that your memory may be perpetuated beyond the lives of the present generation who have known you in person. (Applause.)

Mr. Goddard, the real present which, on behalf of the whole of the members of this Institution, I have now made to you is that of our lasting gratitude and affection ; but, as a minor and entirely incidental accompaniment, I will ask your acceptance of this cheque for one thousand guineas — (applause) — which has been so gladly and willingly subscribed by our members generally. We hope you will do us the pleasure of spending it as may seem to you best.

Gentlemen, you will agree with me when I say that a great Secretary has been lost to this Institution. (Prolonged applause.)

Mr. ALEXANDER GODDARD, who received an ovation on rising to reply, said: Mr. President and Gentlemen,—I am sure you will all understand how extraordinarily difficult it must be for me to find words to express all I should like to say to-night. Anything which I may say must appear inadequate, and therefore I must ask you to bear with me. It is always difficult, as I know you will feel with me, to follow Mr. Gerald Eve.

I suppose anyone in my position, giving up a post which he has held for over a quarter of a century and looking back in retrospect, will find quite a number of things which might with advantage have been done, and which for some reason or other, somehow, have not been done, and others which have been done which might, perhaps, better have been neglected. Fortunately for me, both the Council and members in every part of the country have always been extraordinarily kind to their Secretary. I think they must have been actuated by something of the feeling which prompted the notice which, we are told, used to be put up in dancing halls in the Wild West: "Don't shoot the man " at the piano ; he is doing his best." (Laughter.) At any rate, you have always given me the credit for doing my best, and the more than generous testimonial which you have given me to-night, as well as the personal present to my wife and myself, which I have received from the Council this afternoon, will always be treasured by us as tangible and lasting tokens of the good will and consideration which have consistently been extended to us by every class of member since I first came here over twenty-seven years ago.

I see from the agenda paper before me that I am later to be put up for election as an Honorary Member — (applause) — thus following my predecessor, Mr. Julian Rogers. I need hardly say how proud I shall be of such an honour, and also how pleased, because it will enable me to keep in touch with the work you are doing here and to feel that, when I go, the connection between myself and all of you will not cease.

Now, Secretaries come and—although we linger, perhaps, rather a long time ; you have had only two in something like sixty-five years—Secretaries must go, but The Institution, The Chartered Surveyors' Institution of which we are all proud, will go on ; and, I trust, with each succeeding year it may advance in standing and in influence. Each Secretary, in his time and in his turn, will, I am convinced, do all in his power to secure this, but I should like to remind you that the reputation of a great professional society, and the position which it holds in the estimation of the public and of other societies, really depends upon the members themselves. If the tradition of public service, professional qualification, and, above all, business integrity, which was established by your founders nearly seventy years ago, and which has been consistently followed ever since, continues to be the aim of the next generation of surveyors, then I have no doubt at all in my mind as to the future of The Institution. (Applause.)

I think there can be no question that The Institution is established on a firmer basis now than it was when I took over the reins from Julian Rogers, twenty-seven years ago, and I am equally certain that when Major Killick hands over, in his turn, to his successor, the part which it will be taking in the professional and public life of the country will be more important and more predominant even than it is to-day.

Now, I feel that during the twenty-seven years—nearly twenty-eight years—that I have been here, there must have been many occasions on which one has said or done things which may have seemed unsympathetic, arbitrary, or unkind. It is almost impossible to avoid, on occasion, such things, but, if that is so, I regret them, and I can only apologise to any to whom I may have given cause for so thinking. But your extraordinary kindness and generosity this evening, and the good will which you have shown me, not only to-night, but during all these long years, make me feel confident that, when I go, my sins of omission and commission will be overlooked or forgotten, and that when

I leave Great George Street I shall leave behind me only kindly feelings and friendship. (Prolonged applause.)

Mr. President and Gentlemen, in thanking you again and again for your generosity and consideration to me, I should like to commend to you my successor, Major Killick, and to express a hope that you may extend to him the same kind feeling which I have enjoyed in such full measure, and that, when his time comes to take the place which I am taking this evening, he may leave The Institution with the same feelings towards it, and to every member in it, that I have to-night. (Applause.)

There is only one thing more that I want to say. Earlier in my reply I said that you had always given me credit for trying to do my best. That credit is not altogether mine ; much of it is due and should go to the staff. Without their loyalty and without the great support which I have received from Mr. Evans, Mr. Wheatley and Mr. Bennett—(applause)—and all the members of the office staff, and also from the hall staff, headed by Sergeant-Major Bird—(applause)—I feel sure that the credit you have given so fully to me could not have been earned. They have their share in it, and the generous testimonial which you have handed over to me to-night must be taken also as an indirect compliment to them. (Prolonged applause.)

The PRESIDENT then proposed, from the Chair, that Mr. Alexander Goddard be elected an Honorary Member of The Institution, under By-law 8.

The motion was carried unanimously with acclamation.

The PRESIDENT then called on Viscount Lymington for his Paper on "The Elimination of Waste in British Agriculture."

PAPER 543.

THE ELIMINATION OF WASTE IN BRITISH AGRICULTURE.

By Viscount Lymington, M.P.

I feel it a great honour to be asked to read a Paper before your Institution. I am struck by the fact that in the whole course of your existence you have had only two Secretaries; that appeals to one who likes to keep some of his own good men on the land beside him. I found, in listening to the testimonials to Mr. Goddard, that not only was it a good choice that was made in the beginning, but that there were no regrets in the end. I hope it will not be considered too flippant if I say that among all the testimonials that long telegram which was read from Scotland appealed to me more than anything!

I have come here to-night as someone who, in spite of having been born and bred on the land, and having been familiar with it in two continents from the time he was able to walk, realises very much that there is a vast body of agricultural knowledge outside that which can teach me more than I ever dreamed of knowing. You, in this Institution, are responsible for creating the law and the custom of English agriculture, and the most important thing Englishmen have ever given to the world is the law of custom instead of statute law. Anything I say to-night is said, not with the desire to be dogmatic or with the idea that I know more than you do, but only because it is out of the clash of our own experience that we can somehow hope to formulate the things which may bring us peace, prosperity and permanence so far as the future of British agriculture is concerned.

I have tried as far as possible—though it is not altogether possible, whatever you do—to keep away from the purely political side of agriculture. I am not speaking of party politics, but whatever you do in this life you must deal with politics. I have tried to envisage in this very raw sketch I have given you that side of agriculture in which you, as experts, and those of us who are landlords and farmers as experts, may give something of our own experience to the development of the future, when once the absolutely necessary security has been granted.

Now, had I had the time, it would have required two months' steady work to draw up for you a Paper as to which I could have said "I shall hold to this" "as my last word until the cows come home." Unfortunately, however, very shortly after your President and Secretary sent me this most flattering invitation, I did what I had said before I would never do, and that is to go to an International Congress and speak and read a Paper there. I thought that, as with most International Congresses, I need not pay a particular amount of attention, and that I could do my job for you in the time I was away abroad in Italy as well as I could do it anywhere else, because I should probably have more leisure and less interruption. It so happened, however, that we were worked in the Congress eight hours a day, and the remaining hours, when we were not in the Congress, we were shown one thing and another, and we were also, as well as that, entertained to such an extent that I simply had not the time to do anything but give you this skeleton Paper (for which I apologise, because it is not worthy in any sense of your great Institution) as a basis on which I might make my remarks to-night.

Now, the problem of waste is, I believe, as regards ourselves, as people concerned with the work of dealing with the land, one of the most acute of all agricultural problems. It concerns practically everything we do—our accounts, our marketing, our methods of land tenure, and, indeed, nearly every single thing on which we embark, whether as land agents, surveyors, landowners, or farmers. There is one side of waste which it is obviously impossible to deal with to-night, and that is the farmer's own methods in his tillage from field to field, in his dung-cart, in his feeding, and everything else. That by itself requires not one, but half a dozen Papers. What I want to deal with, therefore, is the things which you as land agents and surveyors are interested in, and which I, as a unfortunate landlord, have to cope with myself.

I do feel, however, that it is quite useless talking about any future land development, or talking about how we are going to be efficient and economical in any way, until we are quite certain that we are going to be guaranteed against insecurity by whatever Government may be in power. We all know the other alternative, which is nothing more nor less than ranching, whether it be arable land or whether it be pasture land. We can do that, possibly, with the minimum of labour and with the minimum of productive value, and scrape a living from the land in this country somehow or other ; but it is not going to be a land worthy of England, worthy of the craft and knowledge of the labourer or worthy of your skill, for us to exercise ourselves upon.

Now, I believe we are going to have that guarantee of security. Whether or not the Government is even yet, or the country is even yet, fully alive to the implications of it is another matter, but the fact remains that the towns, and the Government itself, have drifted almost willy-nilly into the position of saying that they will, whatever else happens, at any rate consider the guarantee of that security.

I have one more warning. The time is short. You cannot treat agriculture like an industry. You can talk of opening up a mine or a factory in six months' time and setting it going full blast, but in agriculture you and I know very well that month by month the opportunities lapse, and if you do not take advantage of them in agricultural production you have to wait for another year.

That being so, outside the individual man's method of his ordinary farming, waste seems to me to be a lack of the spirit of corporate responsibility in the individual.

If I may explain that, someone may have a piece of land surrounded on three sides by woods, not very easy to cultivate and not very profitable. It is allowed to go down to thistles and docks, and the prevailing wind blows the stuff off on the fourth side on to a neighbour's land. It pays the man to let that land run to thistles and docks, but it does not pay the neighbour, who gets all the benefit of it! If everybody adopted that particular system, everybody would blow thistles and docks on to his neighbour's land. It is the very essence of farming in this country, or in any other country, that you and I, whoever we are, who are farming, and who have the most individual methods and of necessity deal with our problems individually, must realise that whatever we do there is a corporate responsibility in the management of the land which cannot be fulfilled unless we accept that responsibility, each and individually ourselves, for our neighbours.

The first form of waste I should like to see tackled is our system of land tenure, with accounts and valuations as a corollary. I do not mean by that that I am a revolutionary; I am probably more of a traditionalist than anybody else in this room. I mean that in a century of land neglect and of town prosperity there has grown up a system of irresponsibility in land tenure and a system of general neglect which, if we are going to keep the landlord and tenant system in the future, must be radically dealt with to get on with the business for which we are met to-night.

We cannot change the things that are right by custom and tradition through the centuries; it is those things we have to nurture and to improve. But all those of us who have had to deal with land have seen neglect and abuses creep in which have not anything to do whatever with sound tradition, but mostly have to do with that tradition which says that because you have dealt with the Corn Laws you can go into the town and make money and make the land a rich man's hobby. And because it was a rich man's hobby and because—though I do not want to be political—it was the easiest method of attack for the agitator who wanted to cover up all the enormities he was doing to labour in the towns, the sand he was putting in the sugar, and so on, he attacked the landlord, who was the only man left doing a responsible job ; and the landlord, like a fool, lay down and died.

The easiest form of that attack has been death duties. Any one of us knows the waste that that has caused, but, perhaps, it has not been made really apparent why that waste has been so absolutely ruinous to the landed industry. The reason is this. If you charge high death duties on somebody who has got all his money in war bonds, when the death duties have to be paid they can be put on the market, and it does not matter twopence to anybody ; somebody else can buy them, and, if the man is worth while, he can go on and make more money, or, if not, he may sink lower and lower ; but a landed estate, or, indeed, any manufacturing industry run as a responsible personal business, which has to sell up a quarter or a third or a half of the whole to pay death duties, has either got to put out of gear the whole running of the machine or else go on impoverished and debt-encumbered, so that the proper repairs and the proper work cannot be properly done.

I remember a very famous gentleman, who has done more, perhaps, for the destruction of agriculture and said more about its benefits than anybody else, stating—I cannot remember whether it was in a Green Book or a Yellow Book — that of course things that landlords got, like rent, just came in the night while they slept. I do not remember how much he had in War Bonds at that time ! But any one of us knows that there is no industry upon which lower interest for capital is charged and in which, if it is properly run, it is necessary to take a more responsible interest, and exercise that interest from day to day in personal supervision, than the land industry.

If that is going to be dealt with properly, there is another guarantee that we as landlords must be prepared to give.

Nobody knows better than myself how in many cases the landowning side of landlordism has sunk, and badly sunk, in a sort of "Oh, let it go and be damned! I can't be" bothered. It does not pay, and I don't care; sell it and "put it into something like house property or War Bonds, "or anything else and let it go," or else, as long as the tenant pays his rent, whether he grows thistles or any other thing, it does not matter; the attitude is "Let it go on! "I have enough money to carry on and have a bit of "shooting."

That is not worthy of any single tradition that started from the feudal traditions or anything else on the land. If death duties are going to be radically dealt with on all forms of responsibly administered property, and I include town property as well, there must be in return for that a very great change of heart on the part of at least a third of the landowning community of this country.

This brings me to the first radical thing I want to talk about. It is not radical in the sense of being counter to our tradition, but it is radical to the present laissez faire notions of everything. I suggest there should be built up, within the landed industry itself, a body of responsible and authoritative opinion that can deal with all derelictions of duty on the landowner's part, and, perhaps, later on, on the farmer's part, in exactly the same spirit as the General Medical Council deals with derelictions of duty among the members of the medical profession. I believe we shall have to get some form of authoritative body among ourselves, which will ultimately be able to give judgment against a man who is failing badly in his duty, who is letting his land go waste, or is farming it only for his shooting or treating it as a hobby, or else treating it, as I have known it treated, as something simply to illustrate the devastation of tithes and turning whole villages out of work, and letting it go derelict in order not to pay tithes. I think we shall have to have some body, chosen among ourselves, who will be absolutely jealous for the pride and the position of the landowning industry as a whole. I know this will seem a big innovation in the eyes of many, but it is of the very spirit of all early English legislation and thought, and it is not a break away from tradition, but a return to tradition to envisage something of that sort.

This brings me to the second cause of waste, and here I know I am treading where many angels go in exactly the opposite direction. I refer to the intermediaries between the landowner and the land. I believe personally that in these very bad times one of the things which has enabled men to carry on at all has been the existence of those intermediaries, and they have done a most noble and magnificent job. But one of the very serious things about it is that when the landowner was being taught that there was no hope for agriculture in England, and that if he went into the City and made a bit of money he might be able to keep his land, and have people taking off their hats to him at his lodge gates, one of the things which divorced him from the land has been to some extent those intermediaries.

Now, the worst of those is, I believe, the family lawyer. I have yet to meet a landowner who could speak in terms that were at all moderate or mild of his family lawyer. He knew least about the land, and did most to teach the landowner that it was not a gentleman's business to go into any of his own affairs at all, and rarely has he been a supremely competent man who might have done the thing as well as the landlord.

The second thing—and this has arisen of necessity and has been very largely, I think, the landlord's fault—has been the idea that this was a sort of secret trade union business, and that you could not learn how to deal with your own land. You let people come in and value for you between the incoming and the outgoing tenants. Whatever they did you accepted as some sort of magic cabala which was something you could not dispute and could not deal with by common-sense. Most of the law of the land of this country has come from the innate common-sense of the people being put by such gentlemen as yourselves into common-sense language which they could understand and give judgments on through arbitrations, and so on. What has happened in the last few years—I cannot go back very far because I have not the experience; but at any rate in the last few years—is that there has grown up a radical alteration with regard to forms of cultivation and forms of tillage with which these old laws and customs have not come into line. I shall deal with that a little later on.

Finally, there has grown up, quite lately, I believe—though I speak open to correction—a system of multiple land agencies, generally held from an office in some big town. That is at any rate a development of the last twenty years. I worked myself for some months in one in London, and I cannot be sufficiently grateful for the experience I gained there; but in general, where you have a resident landlord, a system of land agency run for half a dozen, a dozen or two dozen estates, hundreds of thousands of acres, from a London office, is absolutely divorcing the owner from all personal contact with his own people. He cannot see his agent every morning, as he would if he had his own resident agent, about the local details; he must wait for a month or six weeks or two weeks, according to the number of times he comes to town, to get his judgments, to receive his reports, and to know what is going on. He may ride round and see cottages in disrepair and a farmer with a grievance, but he cannot decide anything until he has seen the man in London who is responsible for running the thing.

I do not believe that is a healthy state of affairs, certainly if landowning is ever going to become prosperous and the land itself is going to become prosperous in this country. We need, we who are landowners, all the help and all the advice we can get, but, just as in any other business than agriculture all the world over, we want to deal with our subjects, whatever they may be, as directly as possible, and we do not want in this particular sphere more people gaining a living out of it than are necessary. Anybody can see the justice of that, but at the present time there is a tendency to make this a separate priesthood of the Law and the Prophets, which I do not believe is absolutely necessary for the running of agricultural land.

Now, where I believe the multiple agent can be enormously useful and do an immense amount of good is in his advice to the landowner and the general farmer. He is, say, in touch with a hundred thousand acres of land. He knows the business going on in each of them. His experience is not localised, but spread over a large part of the country ; and, more than that, he has probably two or three people in his office who are absolutely first-rate business men and accountants, who will give the most hard-headed advice as to the monthly, quarterly or yearly accounts. Where the landlord and the resident agent are always liable to overstep the mark is in seeing the absolute necessity for an improvement or a repair, and yet, though they do not know exactly where the money is coming from, they go and do it all the same. That is where the hardest-headed business advice is absolutely necessary. Whether or not the landowner accepts that advice will probably depend on the state of his enthusiasm and of his purse ; but if he has got that advice he has got something which the ordinary training of the land does not enable him to acquire, and which he would find it extraordinarily difficult to get otherwise.

What I think we are really after is the personal touch and personal control on the land. It is more necessary there than anywhere else. A factory with 1,000 employees can go steadily ahead, working on a routine ; one big storm will fell timber from one end of an estate to the other. The farmer's job is telling him to alter his work from hour to hour and day to day and week to week, and the personal touch is very necessary. Whatever socialisation you may have, whatever grand schemes you may evolve on the lines of Russian or anywhere else, nothing will ever replace that personal touch and personal enthusiasm.

I go from there to another thing which I think in the future will need very serious consideration, and to which a body like yours can give the most expert consideration, and that is the law of arbitration. We all know that when you have somebody farming badly, either deliberately or because he is too incompetent to do otherwise, it is impossible, under the present laws of land tenure, to get real satisfaction against him. It is perfectly true the law provides for all sorts of arbitration, and for county council committees, but have you ever known them work?

I am only putting this up as something we shall have to tackle. Last year, at the Farmers' Club dinner—I am not taking a personal example this time—somebody sitting next to me was talking about this particular matter. I want to remember the tale he told me as accurately as possible, but roughly it was this. A farmer had been farming perfectly atrociously on his land. My friend took it to the local committee, who sent a man to deal with it. That man, I am sorry to say, happened to be a land agent and valuer, and he said "There is nothing doing; I am not going to bother about this fellow; you are all right." It so happened the next year that that farmer gave notice. My friend tried to let the farm at the same rent that the outgoing tenant had paid for it. It came up for arbitration afterwards, and the same man who had refused to grant the landlord anything against the old tenant said "Look here, that field and that field and that field have not had any attention for years, and it is perfectly ridiculous to think of asking a rent for them, under these circumstances, for two or three years to come." My informant replied "Yes, but those are the fields you would not turn out the last man for!"

I am saying this with some trepidation, but it seems to me that while in cases of arbitration local knowledge is most valuable, it does put the local valuer in the most appalling position. He is between the devil and the deep sea. He knows the farmer's condition, and it is extremely hard for him, if he is going to give an arbitral decision, which he may have to do, to give one which will either not ruin his business or else be fair. I am not saying it happens many times, but it does on occasions, and we all know it. I believe that some sort of panel, accepting the local district's advice, but well outside the local district, should, even for the sake of the valuers and land agents themselves, be introduced, in order to save people from the predicament in which they are now placed.

That applies very much also to the law against bad neighbours in the way of straying stock and things of that sort. I can give you one example. I saw a stallion jump a five-bar gate and serve a hunter mare—he was only two years old, and a screw at that—and kick another mare so that she was unfit for hunting and had to be killed. The veterinary surgeon called in on that found a slight touch of nævicule in the mare that was kicked. He did not want to go right through the Courts and be dragged through everything, and so he put it down to that. It is extremely difficult if you are not going to be able to have any sense of responsibility in straying animals and be able to get any judgment ; you are always going to allow the scamp to get the best of you.

There is one other form of waste which I believe is very important, and that is the waste caused by vermin. That is again a thing we shall have to deal with corporately or not at all. I happen to live on a rat migration route from Southampton. I can kill five or ten thousand rats a year on my own farms, but it does not prevent quite 10 per cent. of my ricks being eaten up by rats ; and Mr. Arnold, whom I am glad to see here to-night, and who is a real rat expert in our part of the world, can bear me out there.

Pigeons are another nuisance. Year after year I try to grow spring keep for my sheep, and every year the pigeons clear sixty acres or so. I can put a keeper there every day of the week, but the pigeons will go to the far end. I do not know how that is going to be dealt with except by poison in a less namby-pamby country. Then there are sparrows and rooks ; every single thing that can eat into our crops does eat into our crops, and no amount of bird-loving ornithologists who dissect crops and say how many wireworms they find there will convince me they are not the worst pest we have in the country. You can go to foreign countries where there is not a bird to be seen and you will not find trouble. We have to deal collectively with things like rats, pigeons, sparrows, and even rooks, which are definitely taking 10 to 12 per cent. of all our arable produce.

Then I should like to deal with the subject of farm valuations. How many of us have had to go over a farm, either with the outgoing or the incoming tenant, or with the landlord, and have found ploughing that has been done in the spring, there is a wet summer, and nothing has been done in between, so that there is a great crop of couch growing on the land and a few docks in flower, and yet you have to pay for the spring ploughing, which has only meant the cultivation of all this stuff? Surely we shall have to consider dealing with such problems as that if we are to have landlord and tenant farming in the future.

My time is getting short, and there are only two other things with which I shall deal. I have referred to the responsibilities of the landlord as an owner of land. I do not believe in future we can go on simply extracting a rent in good years and remitting it in bad times. We cannot go on like that for ever. I have been looking through our own estate rent-rolls. Seventy years ago and sixty years ago they were three times what they are now, and they were all collected, and the farmer paid the tithe. Now the landlord pays the tithe, which, in this particular instance, is well over one-third of the gross takings. Repairs, taxes, and so on, come to far beyond the rest of the gross takings, and you are expected to keep on under that system! Politics have made it impossible, if there is an improvement in land in general, to be able to get a return of rent sufficient to be anything like the return obtained in industry.

If you want 2, 3, 4 or 5 per cent. from the land, I think you will have in future to devise some system whereby the landlord is a real partner on the land, so that in good years, when money is being made, he will be able, through a form of profit-sharing or taking of the crops or produce, to get the benefit and make up to 5, 10 or even 15 per cent. ; but in bad years he will again be the partner of the farmer and take very little, but by working such things as dairying centres and crop-drying centres, he will be able to take a certain percentage of the gross outgoings off the land as his share, and help in the marketing of them, and even help in the buying of the farmer's produce at wholesale prices for cross-entry purposes. He will then be able to share in the system of land tenure, so that, by his co-operative efforts, the very smallest farmer may gain, the large farmer be no worse off, and the middle farmer be really able to carry on. The middle type of farmer is the man who is going to be hard hit in the future, and unless we devise some system like the metayer system in France, whereby the landlord and the farmer share in the profits of the land, we shall never be able to carry on what has, after all, grown into our blood, the landlord and tenant system.

My time is up, and I shall not be able to deal with what was the last point in my Paper, the necessity for a fixed price. I shall make only one or two remarks in conclusion. Sir Daniel Hall said to me at dinner: "I wish you would come down to the Lord Wandsworth Institute and see what we are doing there in the training of young men." He added: "It is extraordinarily difficult now, in the present depressed state of agriculture, to find them a job." It is ; but there has never been a moment in the history of the land in England for two centuries when things have looked so bright or we have had such opportunities as we have got now. Either the whole of England is going to rack and ruin with us, or the problem of the land is going to be dealt with, and dealt with properly, and will save England. If England goes to rack and ruin, the only thing that will remain, apart from a few empty factories, will be the land producing food. If England does not go to rack and ruin it will be saved by the land.

Now, we have always looked upon cheap labour on the land as something rather to our advantage. We have often paid a responsible farm manager less for work, with anything from six to ten thousand pounds going through his hands a year, than you pay a commissionaire outside a London office. We who are dealing with the land must look to it that excellence is rewarded on the land to the very utmost. We are losing, I believe, the finest generation of old craftsmen in this country which the country can produce. The educational authorities are doing precious little to replace that. It will be upon our efforts, and upon our picking and upon our being able to supply a chance of rising and the right wages for the future, that the real working of the land will depend. I do ask those of you who have any influence with the landlord who is divorced now from his land to use your influence and your knowledge, which is far more expert, to pick out those young men and boys coming from country schools and village schools who will be the backbone of the agriculture of this country in the future.

Mr. ROBERT COBB (Member of Council), in moving the vote of thanks to Lord Lymington, said he did so with the greater pleasure because a short time ago Lord Lymington came to Kent and gave an able address on the advantages and disadvantages of agriculture. Some time after that, 150 members of the Farmers' Union in Kent went over to see Lord Lymington's place in Hampshire, and came back vastly impressed, not only with the hospitality they had received, but with the great efforts he had made to restore order and usefulness to 3,000 acres.

He was glad to find that in the present Paper Lord Lymington did not press for the mechanisation of England, whereby anyone returning from foreign parts would find only one big field and the smell of tractor oil. No doubt Lord Lymington went in for mechanisation on his land, but he once wrote that it "might encourage depopulation of "land to the profit of the capitalist," and personally that was what he felt about the mechanisation of land.

He thought the pith of the Paper was contained in one or two passages, namely, "our whole attitude towards waste "must be governed by the amount of stability liable to be "afforded to the industry in factors over which we have “no control,” and again, “This guarantee against unlimited import and fluctuating prices is a sine qua non in any effort to put our own house in order.” Put shortly, that meant as the Minister himself had said, “prices for agricultural produce.” Once that was established, English agriculture would go ahead again.

Lord Lymington referred to land tenure, and to the question of whether this country should alter the present principle and go back to the French principle of sharing the profits, or otherwise of the land. Personally, he hoped that the fortunes of English agriculture would be so restored that it would be possible for the old régime of landlord and tenant to remain. He did not like the co-operative methods to which Lord Lymington had referred. He had read about the French metayer system in a paper only that day, and he saw it was generally applied only in the very poorest districts of the poorest quality, and he did not think that applied to England.

He did not propose to say anything about the family land agent, because he was not sure from the Paper whether Lord Lymington really wanted the family land agent or the multiple land agent. Lord Lymington had, however, referred to the tenant-right valuers, and had described the system of valuation for tillages as archaic. His lordship had not said how tillage should be valued, but perhaps he would do so in his reply.

Then he said that arbitrations were expensive. Tenant-right valuers were often arbitrators, and one thing they did not find was that arbitrations were expensive. Lord Lymington also said that arbitrations were rarely satisfactory. His own experience was that they were never satisfactory. Whatever was done in an arbitration it seldom gave anybody what they wanted, and therefore he thought the decision was generally about right.

Lord Lymington had said that the “rascal,” as he described him—the outgoing tenant—was never dilapidated enough. The bad farmer was never dilapidated enough, but why, he would ask, had the tenant got the farm into such a state, and why had the landlord not turned him out before the farm got into that state? The reason was, of course, that the landlord might be faced with the disturbance claim. Personally he felt that in these days if the tenant gave notice to quit it was the landlord who should have the disturbance claim. The present arrangement was all very well in the "boom" days when people bought land for profiteering, and tenants had to be protected against being turned out of their holdings.

It was probably also at the back of his lordship's mind that buildings were never dilapidated sufficiently in outgoing tenant valuations. Personally he did not altogether agree with him there, because, as an arbitrator, he knew that nine times out of ten when one said "Why was not 'this done, Mr. Jones?'" the answer was "The landlord 'declined to give me the materials.'" In fact that was often the case, and it raised the question of whether a system could be devised whereby the tenant paid a bigger rent and was liable for nothing, or paid a less rent and was liable for everything. The question of materials was a very serious one in the matter of waste at the present time.

He had hoped Lord Lyminster would say more about tithe. If the agricultural depression continued as it was at present, there could be no question, he thought, that the whole tithe business would have to be altered. On what basis he could not say, but, he hoped, not on that of a fixed price, because he was sure that no fixed price, no matter how high or low, would remain correct always. It was desirable to go back to a basis calculated on the value of the produce. The old basis had been the price of wheat, barley and oats, but the price of live-stock should be considered as well. He hoped, however, that if the Tithe Act was amended, the sinking fund would be adhered to, so that in their children's time tithe would be buried with a big tombstone on it.

This, as Lord Lyminster had said, was an age of megalomania. Cases could be quoted of sanitary inspectors in two adjoining areas who had entirely different views on how many cubic feet of air a cow should have ; it might therefore be necessary, if an inspector died and a new one with different views took his place, to alter everything which had been done to meet the requirements of the former. That seemed to be officialdom run mad.

Referring to other forms of waste, he sometimes wondered whether the Treasury ever realised, when, as they occasionally did, they refused grants for the improvement of agriculture, what they lost in taxes under Schedules A and B by letting land go to waste.

Then there was the waste which occurred through failure to educate consumers. If they could be brought to realise the extra labour and cost involved in bringing meat and other produce from America, Australia, and so on, when they could go next door and get better stuff, that would eliminate a big item of waste in this country. The farmer also must give up thinking he could market what he liked and what he thought the public wanted. The public had their own idea of what they wanted, and the farmer who supplied them was their servant and must fall in with their wishes.

One big cause of waste had now been realised by the Minister of Agriculture, who, by the steps he had taken with regard to meat, at last had recognised that action should come before conference and " wait and see."

With those few words he desired, on behalf of The Institution, to propose a hearty vote of thanks to Lord Lymington, not only for what he had written and discussed, but for all he thought, did and said for agriculture ; for his active work on the Agricultural Committee of the House of Commons, remembering also what he wrote in the English Review, that England could, perhaps, never provide her own wheat supply, but with care and trouble could provide all that was needed in vegetables, fruit and live-stock, and, incidentally, employ another 400,000 men.

MR. E. S. W. DALE (Chartered Surveyor), in seconding the vote of thanks to Lord Lymington, said the views he had expressed and the ideals he had put forward must, in spite of what his friend Mr. Cobb had said, commend themselves to all. Lord Lymington had made a practical, as well as theoretical, study of agriculture. He farmed a large area of his own land in Hampshire on thoroughly up-to-date lines, and, although some of his neighbours might be sceptical of the results of his new methods and appliances, it would be found that the end had justified the means.

People might sneer at mechanised farming, but the time had come when the big farms of the country would have to be managed in that way. A big capital and a big expanse of land were required to make it an economical proposition, but if the right class of land and the capital were available, he believed it was the only economical way to farm that class of land to-day. Lord Lymington had gone in for that kind of farming as a serious commercial proposition. A good deal of money had been lost in agricultural ventures by people who had gone in for all sorts of fancy ideas, and, of course, eventually come to grief ; but he himself thought the day had come when the farming of big areas of land in a county like Hampshire would have to be tackled by Lord Lymington's methods.

In his Paper Lord Lymington had approached the problem of waste under two headings: firstly, the system of land tenure ; and secondly, methods of marketing.

Under the first of those headings he had referred to death duties and their effect in the breaking up of landed estates. If, as he suggested, the land were freed from those duties, would that restore the old-fashioned country squire, who, as the farmer now realised only too well, was his best friend? Personally he thought not ; he wished he could think otherwise, because he thought there could be no question that the country squire was the backbone of British agriculture. When his tenant was in difficulties, he was only too anxious to meet him. They jogged along together; they had confidence in one another, and it was a happy country life ; but, unfortunately, those times had, he was afraid, gone for ever, and the facts of the present situation must be faced.

Lord Lymington went on to deplore the passing of the family land agent and family lawyer. That might or might not have benefited the surveyors' profession and the legal profession, but it could not be gainsaid that under the old régime there had been more confidence and more sympathy between the landlord and his tenant. In those days, moreover, there were not the harassing restrictions on land ownership which had done so much to estrange the landlord and his tenant.

Lord Lymington had avoided politics, but politics, after all, had put this country and its agriculture in the position in which they were to-day. He remembered very well an old political poster which portrayed the landlord as a pigeon and the tenant as a crow, and parodied a nursery rhyme: "Lloydie Georgie bent his bow, shot at a pigeon and killed a crow." All those present had lived to see that prediction come true; the boy had bent his bow at the pigeon, the landlord, but unfortunately killed the crow.

Lord Lymington had expressed the opinion that the present-day methods of valuation and arbitration were archaic, expensive, and rarely satisfactory. Those who were constantly engaged in those matters realised that the procedure nowadays left much to be desired. Unfortunately, however, their hands were tied by recent legal enactments, which to a large extent had engendered mistrust where formerly good faith and a spirit of give and take existed. In the old days he remembered that when he was articled to a land agent in Dorset they went out in the dog-cart and met another valuer and went over the farm, and then on getting back, they had a bit of a chat and something to eat and drink, spending a very pleasant day, and the business was all settled up before they left that night. The position was different then; to-day they were hemmed in by all sorts of restrictions, and the out-going tenant, the in-coming tenant and the landlord were suspicious of each other, and they all wanted their pound of flesh. That was why it was so much easier then to settle the tenant-right valuations.

With regard to marketing, everyone would be convinced, he thought, of the necessity for control of imports, and it seemed to him that the future of agriculture in this country was bound up in that. Without the control of imports, the country would be flooded with the surplus from other countries, it would be impossible to find a market for home produce, and the position of agriculture would not improve.

At long last a step was being made in that direction, and, provided protection was given to the consumer—an important point—and the farmers in this country were prepared to supply the article required, both in quantity and quality, there was no reason why farming should not be restored to its former prosperity. He said “its former prosperity.” It was a long time since farming had been prosperous, but it had seen better times, and it was to be hoped they would come again.

Lord Lymington had referred to co-operation in the marketing of produce, and outlined a scheme which embraced not only co-operation in marketing but also wholesale buying, and, if he read him aright, the ideal he aimed at was an amalgamation of the small-holder, the large farmer, and the landowner. Much as one might be in sympathy with that ideal, he personally was afraid, having regard to the Britisher's love of independence, and also to the large number of the farmers in this country who were not, and were never likely to be, in a position to alter their methods of business, that might be very difficult of attainment. The farmer had been in the habit of dealing with this merchant and that merchant and the other merchant ; he got credit here and credit there, and there were wheels within wheels, so that it would be difficult, especially for the small farmer, to cut adrift from those methods. It was not possible to say “ You must get away from all those old “ customs and start afresh, and join together and do this, “ that and the other.” All would be well if that were practicable, but he was afraid it was not.

The Institution owed Lord Lymington a great debt of gratitude for what he had done and hoped to do for agriculture, and, personally, he hoped, and was sure everyone present did, that the time was not far distant when Lord Lymington would be promoted to a position in His Majesty's Government where his experience, common-sense and great ability might be placed at the service of the country, and where his ideals might have a chance of realisation.

Sir GEORGE COURTHOPE, BT., M.P. (Associate), said Lord Lymington had, in his opinion, rendered a considerable service by his reminder that any avoidable increase of cost or any avoidable loss of price was waste. That service was none the less because possibly some of those present might not agree with all his statements and arguments. There were many with which personally he cordially agreed, and he hoped Lord Lymington would not think any the worse of him if he left them alone and touched on one or two where he happened to differ from him.

He was glad of the opportunity to say a word about the services rendered to the landowner by the professional classes, and he could do so, perhaps, with less personal discomfort than many of those present, because, although the Institution had paid him the extreme compliment of making him an Associate of its Council, he was not a professional surveyor but an agricultural landowner, and looked on these matters from that point of view.

He thought Lord Lymington was mistaken in his view as to the professional services rendered to the landowner. It was, of course, easy to take an example here and an example there which had been unfortunate, but personally he thought that, with that qualification, those services were quite admirable, and he did not think there was any waste there, anything which one might with advantage hope to cut away.

With regard to the family lawyer, he regarded anyone who gave anything to a lawyer to do except purely legal business as a fool, and anyone who tried to do legal business without employing a lawyer was a greater fool still. The lawyer had his very necessary and important function, but he should be limited to the carrying out of that function, and should not be expected to do work which should be given to a surveyor or a valuer or a member of some other profession of that kind.

His disagreed also with Lord Lymington on the subject of the multiple agent. No doubt the ideal for a rural estate was a resident owner and a resident agent working hand in hand, but it must be remembered that the average size of estates was getting steadily less and less, and consequently the number of estates which could possibly carry out of their own net rentals a whole-time-agent was getting dangerously less and less ; and yet the owners of those small estates had just as great need, and probably greater need, of professional advice and professional service as the larger landowner, who might have had greater opportunities than the smaller man of learning something about the management of landed property himself. It was only the multiple land agent who could help those little estates, which were increasing so rapidly in number, and his personal experience, for what it was worth, was that on the whole they gave that help admirably.

There was one other point of disagreement, and that was the suggestion to alter the law of arbitration, and one or two others of that kind. His own view was "Heaven protect us from legislation!" He used to be very enthusiastic about legislation. Just about the time that Mr. Goddard was entering The Institution, and Lord Lymington was thinking of leaving the nursery, he entered the House of Commons, full of enthusiasm ; but, with very few exceptions, it was true to say that all legislation which had been passed altering land tenure and affecting specifically agricultural land and its ownership had left the position worse than it was before. It would be a good thing if it were possible to go back to the law of landlord and tenant as it was in 1905. It would never be possible to do so, but with the recollection of the unfortunate things which had been done in the interval in mind, the attitude he took up was "Let us suffer gladly the ills that we know now, rather

“ bring us.”

It must be remembered, when considering rural land, that the owners of landed property were necessarily a minority. Even when supported by great professional bodies like The Chartered Surveyors' Institution they still remained a minority, more or less at the political mercy of a vast majority who knew absolutely nothing about land, who regarded them as monopolists, who hated vested interests, who regarded them as parasites upon the working man, or something of that kind. They would always be in a minority, and it was very much better to leave legislation well alone. Like Mr. Cobb, he believed that half the present troubles between landlord and tenant simply arose from the fact that the yield from the land was not sufficient to give a decent living to either, much less to both, and when two people were scrambling for what was not enough for one, friction and trouble were inevitable from time to time. Once there was a proper relation of commodities to sterling, and a proper relation of production costs to selling price, he thought it would be found that those difficulties would tend to disappear.

Personally he was an optimist. He did not think prosperity would come in a hurry, but he did believe that the corner had been turned, and the most important of the steps to bring back prosperity had now been taken. He looked forward with confidence, provided patience were exercised, to the time when the land might be able to carry decently both an occupier and an owner, making a reasonable return to both. But if it did not, if everything collapsed, the position still remained that, if the values of everything collapsed, the only thing worth having would be land and live-stock, and he imagined that under those circumstances those who possessed land and live-stock would be so wealthy, relatively to the rest of the population, that there would be ample and lucrative employment for all the learned professions who were anxious to serve them.

Mr. MERVYN T. DAVIES (President, National Farmers' Union) said that the whole question could, he thought, be summed up in a few words ; if the price of agricultural produce were at a fair level, the elimination of waste would follow. Waste, after all, was largely produced by cheapness. Thistles and docks were allowed to grow because no labour was employed on the farm beyond what was absolutely necessary. The same thing applied to the cleaning out of ditches and looking after hedges ; all that work, which might be termed unproductive, had to stand over until such time as the general balance of agricultural prices permitted of more labour being employed on the land.

He was inclined to agree with Sir George Courthope that we had turned the corner ; and if progress were continued, it would be found that the land would be far better attended to, and the various little jobs, the neglect of which created waste, would be attended to. The same thing applied, of course, to the employment of more labour.

A new situation with regard to agriculture was being reached. The townsman was giving, and would continue to give, more attention to agriculture. His attitude would be reflected in Parliament, and agriculture, he believed, would no longer be the Cinderella industry. On the other hand there was a different outlook on the part of agriculturists themselves.

It might be that the old order of things was passing away. He could remember how the very word " control " was detested by everyone who had to do with the land, whether the landlord, the agent or the farmer. He was not so sure that that was the case to-day. If agriculture was to be one of the leading topics which would occupy the attention of the Legislature, then agriculturists would have to submit to a certain amount of control ; and he did not find there was the old opposition to control provided it was made worth while ; in other words, provided there was a quid pro quo.

With regard to marketing the change of outlook which had taken place lately was surprising. He was the head of an organisation which, not very long ago, opposed for all it was worth a measure called the Agricultural Marketing Act. To-day that organisation took quite a different view of that Act, and even welcomed it, simply because the principle of controlling imports had now been adopted. With that, which was, after all, the first step in the raising of the price level, there came a complete change of outlook. A rise in the price level sufficient to give to the producer a satisfactory return, without unduly raising the price to the consumer, would be a potent factor in eliminating waste in agriculture.

Surprisingly, perhaps, Lord Lymington did not touch on the question of grazing. He thought that, generally speaking, a good deal of waste did take place in grazing. Going about the country one saw a very large amount of land understocked, not because the occupiers of that land did not know the way to farm it, but simply and solely because there was insufficient capital available to stock the land. There, again, a rise in the price level of the main agricultural commodities would lead to an extra supply of capital and confidence, and with that an extra amount of credit. There would be another very great factor in eliminating waste.

Sir DANIEL HALL, K.C.B. (Chief Scientific Adviser, Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries), said that agricultural land in England was the cheapest in the world, far cheaper than corresponding land on the Continent and in the Dominions, for example, which constituted some of our chief competitors. Some years ago he saw an estate being divided up which was situated some twenty miles outside Melbourne, Australia, for the purpose of growing apples. It was poorish land, much inferior to much of that which was available in southern England. It was uncleared, unroaded and unfenced, and it had no water ; but it was being sold at £12 an acre to grow apples for the London market. If that was the position in Australia, there must surely be a future for English agricultural land.

English land was under-valued because the prices of agricultural produce the world over were at so low a level. On that point it was often argued, both here and on the Continent, that the cause of the present trouble and discontent was over-production of primary commodities.

Now, on the whole he did not believe that there was over-production of agricultural produce. It was true that if one took a single commodity like wheat there was, in a sense, over-production. There was a surplus of wheat at the present time, and, however cheap that wheat became, it could be argued that the ordinary family could not eat more bread than they were actually consuming at present. It was true that there was a limit to consumption, and that limit would not be affected by cheapness, though it might be curtailed by dearness. That, however, was only a partial truth. When the consumption of bread was examined, it was found that the poorer the family the more bread they consumed, and that what people wanted to do, and what they wanted to call on the farmer to do, was to exchange some of the bread which the poorest people were forced to eat at the present time for butter, for milk, for meat, for vegetables, for fruit, and for all the higher scale of agricultural products that the farmer, and the farmer alone, could produce.

He held that in that way the gross demand of the public on the farmer was still, so to speak, infinitely elastic, and that if prosperity returned, the great buying public would make their demands on the farmer not simply for the bare means of sustenance, but for those higher articles of production which really made a greater demand on the farmer's skill and on the farmer's labour, and, consequently, should bring him in a higher return.

The future of agriculture had been discussed. That future rested to a very great extent in the hands of the community at large, and depended on a return to the old measure of prosperity and of purchasing power. But in so far as agriculture could set its own house in order and contribute towards restoring a better state of things, he agreed with Lord Lympington that it was leadership which the agricultural community demanded, and that some of its difficulties had arisen from the disappearance of the old type of landowner who lived on his estate, knew what every tenant could do, and lived with them and helped them. One of the best omens for the future of English agriculture was that a great landowner like Lord Lyvington should once more take up the burden and become a working farmer himself—not a mere shower of pedigree stock, but an actual working farmer who, knowing where the shoe pinched his tenants, could help them and encourage them.

The PRESIDENT said that owing to the lateness of the hour he would ask Lord Lyvington to reply in writing.

The vote of thanks, which had been proposed and seconded, was then put, and carried by acclamation.

LORD LYVINGTON has sent the following written reply:—

I hope Mr. Mervyn Davies and others who have raised details of farming practice such as mechanisation and grazing will forgive me if I do not allude to them. I deliberately left out details of farming practice because I believe that farmers given security can be relied on to improve themselves. And also that security will produce the capital for agricultural improvement.

What in this company I am concerned for is your great part in the future as the agents for the land and in that connection ours as landlords. If agricultural prosperity simply allows us to go to sleep and believe that there will be no need for us to grow and improve our methods, our state as dependants of the land and as its servants will be worse than it is now. We have learned our lessons from the bad times; we must profit by them in the good times to come, in which I firmly believe.

Now, Sir George Courthope has defended the multiple land agent, and others have defended the cheapness of arbitration. It is not the payment of the arbitors to which I object, but the system which makes this necessary. It is also very true that the multiple land agent has performed and does perform a most useful service. But once again the system which makes him necessary is what needs revision. To acquiesce in the present abuses is to make leadership on the land well-nigh impossible. Sir Daniel Hall has emphasised the need for leadership above everything. If there are small owners who cannot support a resident agent, usually there is a local agent who can act for him. But if small landowners are to survive they must do their own job, just as a small farmer must work on his own farm, though a large farmer may afford a working foreman.

I repeat again that to my mind the future of the multiple land agent should be his retention for business and general advice, rather than personal agency which divorces the landowner from his own job.

Sir George says, and we all agree, "the fewer laws the better." Laws based, as most land laws are, on crank ideas or on hard cases always create worse hard cases.

Thus the need of leadership brings me back again to the overcoming of these laws, less by legislation than by the evolution of a new partnership on the land between owner and tenant, an evolution based on very ancient feudal experience.

Mr. Cobb had mentioned the metayer system and tells us it only survives in France in the poorest districts. Most of France is in freehold small farms. The use of the metayer system must therefore be obvious if it enables the farmer to survive with his landlord in districts so hard pressed that farmers are unable to own their own land. But if we look at some of the magnificent work being carried out for the regeneration of Italian agriculture, we find a form of partnership developed on the land there which bids fair to give Italian farming an era of prosperity such as it has not seen since early Roman days.

Political prejudice will never be fair to the landlord if he only takes on a fixed rent however inadequate. No amendment of the land laws will make it much easier for him. Therefore with your help, Gentlemen, I suggest it is worth while trying to evolve something that keeps personal touch and understanding on the land, and unites in it all classes of owners, farmers and labourers in a way that is impossible at present.

I thank you, Gentlemen, for listening, and the kind words in your votes of thanks. If I have spoken out of my own experience (admittedly not as wide as yours) some things with which you were bound to disagree, I did so because it is better to speak to the body in question than to speak or write about it outside. You can reply authoritatively, and it is your help we need to work out our problems on the land.

PAPER 544.

CROWN LANDS.

By A. S. Gaye, C.B., O.B.E. (Commissioner of Crown Lands).

---

*To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 9th

The history of the hereditary estates of the English Crown may conveniently be divided into two periods. Although the kings who ruled precariously over England before the Norman Conquest undoubtedly held lands in right of their Crown, no trustworthy records of their extent now remain, and " Domesday Book " is the obvious starting-point of the first period, which lasted until Queen Anne came to the throne in 1702. During those 600 years and more the sovereign for the time being could, and did, dispose of Crown lands at will. He had not only to maintain the dignity of his position, but also to finance wars and carry on the government of the country, out of such resources as were available ; taxation then, as now, was unpopular, and often it was deemed preferable to meet current expenses out of capital raised by sales of land. It is not for us, in the 20th century, to criticise this as bad finance ; for do we not every year spend as income the proceeds of the death duties, which are essentially a levy on capital? The distinctive feature of the second period, from the beginning of the 18th century to the present day, is the gradual assumption by Parliament of responsibility for the expense of government, necessitating control of the national revenue, including the revenue from Crown lands.

In the year 1085 William the Conqueror resolved to have a detailed survey made of his newly acquired kingdom in order to ascertain its taxable capacity. Although there was then no Chartered Surveyors' Institution from which he could recruit a Valuation Department of the Inland Revenue, he collected a body of extremely efficient amateurs who completed their work, in spite of much local opposition, with marvellous thoroughness within two years. "Domesday Book" mentions 1,422 manors or lordships, besides certain other estates, belonging to the king, and these properties, supposed to have been vested in the Crown since the time of Edward the Confessor, constituted what were known as the "Ancient Demesnes of the Crown." The income of William I., including a number of quit-rents payable out of estates in private ownership, was computed by a contemporary monk named Ordericus Vitalis to be £1,061 10s. 1d. a day, but later authorities considered this to be a wild exaggeration, and their estimates, varying between £20,000 and £40,000 a year, are probably nearer to the truth. Be that as it may, it was not enough for his successor, who found it necessary to realise capital in order to pay his way. It was considered to be an impious act to alienate any of the ancient demesnes, though other Crown property, acquired by prerogative, by escheat, forfeiture, or feudal delinquency, was absolutely at the king's disposal. William II. had no regard for this nice distinction, and apparently was not deterred by the consequences of impiety, for in the course of his short reign he dissipated almost the whole of the estates which he inherited. But the Great Council of the Barons forced him to resume the grants which he had made, and so started a practice which continued with monotonous repetition through many centuries. Kings persistently sold Crown lands in order to provide money both for their personal needs and for the general purposes of government, and Parliament, with equal persistence, passed Acts of Resumption re-vesting the alienated estates in the Crown. Protests by bona fide purchasers were ignored or referred to the public executioner.

Under the Tudors Acts of Resumption were no longer necessary. Although many Crown estates passed into private hands, the proceeds of the suppression of the monasteries, and other confiscations, more than made good the loss, at any rate temporarily. The addition to the annual income of Henry VIII. from these sources is estimated to have been £273,000. But both he and Queen Elizabeth were lavish in their expenditure and in their endowments of educational and other institutions, and by the end of the 16th century the value of the Crown lands was considerably less than it was at the beginning. Nevertheless, James I. succeeded to an inheritance large enough to enable him to raise by sales no less a sum than £775,000 in the course of his reign, and to make generous grants of land to his favourites. In 1610 a Bill was introduced in the House of Lords to prohibit the alienation of Crown lands, but it was thrown out by the Commons.

Charles I. followed his father's example, and at one time he borrowed £320,000 from the City of London on a mortgage of the Crown estates. The loan was paid off later by grants of land. During the Commonwealth most of the remaining Crown lands were sold, but immediately after the Restoration Parliament resorted once again to the time-honoured expedient of an Act of Resumption, annulling the sales by Cromwell, and the total of the net land revenues of the Crown was stated in the Commons Journals, dated 4th September, 1660, to be £218,000. Three years later, however, it had dwindled to £100,000, largely in consequence of the king's grants of land to his friends and supporters, and, at last, in 1702, when William III. died, the Crown lands, exclusive of the Duchy of Cornwall, produced an income of no more than £6,000, if, indeed, so much. So ingloriously ended the first period of their history.

Parliament was now seriously alarmed, and recognised that action must be taken. The first Act of Queen Anne's reign, intituled "An Act for the better Support of Her Majesty's Household and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown," very politely, but very firmly, took away for ever the sovereign's unrestricted power of disposing of the hereditary estates. After reciting previous Acts, by which certain impositions on beer, ale, cyder, and other liquors were granted, with other duties, to William III. "for the Use and Service of His Majesty's Household and Family" and for other His necessary Expences and Occasions," it proceeded to say that Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects the Commons of England, being desirous of settling on Her Majesty for the expenses of Her Civil Government a revenue equal at least to the revenue enjoyed for this purpose by any of her royal predecessors, re-granted to Her Majesty the impositions on beer, &c. So far, so good ; this was common form in the first Act of a new reign. But the Act went on the say that “ Whereas the necessary “ Expences of supporting the Crown or the greatest Part of “ them were formerly defrayed by a Land Revenue which “ hath from Time to Time been impaired and diminished “ by the Grants of former Kings and Queens of this Realm “ so that Her Majesty’s Land Revenues at present can “ afford very little towards the support of Her Government “ . . . . to the End therefore that the Land Revenues of “ the Crown may be preserved improved and increased for “ the best advantage thereof Be it Enacted and Declared ” that no lease or grant of Crown land should be made for a longer term than 31 years or three lives, or of houses for more than 50 years or three lives ; that in no case should less than the ancient or most usual rent be reserved ; and that where no rent had before been reserved, a rent, not under one-third part of the clear yearly value, should be taken. As in many cases the “ ancient or most usual rent ” was only a nominal annual payment, these provisions still left room for a liberal exercise of the sovereign’s generosity, but they made impossible the wholesale alienations which hitherto had been, for good reasons or otherwise, the normal practice of every King and Queen of England for six centuries.

But the new law, while it effectively restrained Queen Anne and her successors from indulging their generous instincts at the expense of the capital of the Crown lands, did not provide against the corruptibility of Ministers and the insatiable acquisitiveness of other public servants. In 1786 Parliament passed an Act appointing three Commissioners to inquire into the state and condition of the Woods, Forests and Land Revenues of the Crown. These Commissioners found great difficulty in getting the information which they required, but they pursued their inquiries with courage and pertinacity, and their Twelfth Report, dated 25th May, 1792, is a State document of great value and interest. After tracing the history of the Crown lands from the earliest times, they denounce in scathing language the malpractices which persisted after the passing of the Act 1 Anne, cap. 1, and largely defeated its object. “ Notwithstanding the sense “ of the House of Commons so strongly expressed, the “ admission on the part of the Crown, and the avowed “ principle of the restraining Act itself, yet in almost every “ lease the lowest rents which the Act would allow have “ been reserved, the longest terms have been uniformly “ granted, and the calculation of the fine has always been “ made at a very high rate of interest. But it was not in “ the granting of leases only that the spirit and intention “ of the Legislature were counteracted and defeated. Within “ twenty years after that Act was passed, Ministers began “ to obtain for their friends alienations of estates in per“ petuity under the sanction of particular Acts of Parlia“ ment.” They go on to show that between 1721 and 1785 estates valued at £17,306 2s. 2½*d.* per annum were sold for no more than £24,579 4*s.*, with a reservation of perpetual rents amounting to £2,057 7*s.* per annum. Some of the properties were sold bona fide for adequate consideration, and this fact emphasises the scandalous nature of the other transactions. “ A very considerable part of those estates “ was given away without any price whatever being “ received by the Crown—a sum of £27,000 being the price “ paid by the purchaser of one of them was not paid into “ the Exchequer, but was otherwise applied.” A particularly interesting transaction mentioned by the Commissioners is worth quoting, viz.: “ Divers Parcels of Ground “ and Houses, comprising the whole of Piccadilly from Park “ Lane to a little Eastward of Engine Street, many Houses

“ in Swallow Street, Warwick Street, Glasshouse Street, “ Beak Street, Leicester Street, Heddon Street, Sherrard
“ Street, Brewer Street, Old Soho, otherwise Wardour “ Street, Knaves Acre, St. James’s Street, Catherine Wheel “ Yard, and Cleveland Row, and the Courts Alleys and “ Passages communicating with these Streets: Estimated “ annual value, £2,047 7*s.* Perpetual rent reserved, “ £12 16*s.* 10*d.* Purchase price, £300.”

These Commissioners produced in all seventeen voluminous reports. Their recommendation for a reorganised system of management for the Crown lands was not put into effect until 1810, but by their exhaustive inquiries and fearless exposures they had already gone a long way towards the cleansing of a veritable Augean Stable.

Meanwhile, in 1760, on the accession of George III., a Civil List Act was passed in a different form: "Whereas "Your Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify Your "Consent to Your faithful Commons that whenever they "should enter upon the Consideration of making Provision "for Your Household and the Honour and Dignity of Your "Crown such Disposition might be made of Your Majesty's "Interest in the Hereditary Revenues of the Crown as might "best conduce to the Utility and Satisfaction of the "Public," the Act proceeds to grant a certain annual income, payable out of the Aggregate Fund, and declares that the produce of the said Hereditary Revenues is made part of that fund. This principle, the surrender of the Hereditary Revenues, has been recited in the preamble of all subsequent Civil List Acts.

Acts were passed in 1794, 1798, 1802, 1803, 1806 and 1808 amending the provisions of 1 Anne, cap. 1, on points of detail, and in 1810, by 50 Geo. III., cap. 65, the King was authorised to appoint Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods, Forests and Land Revenues to take over the duties hitherto exercised since the reign of Henry VIII., with questionable efficiency, but, in some cases at any rate, unquestionable benefit to themselves, by surveyors-general. During the next seventeen years there were eleven more statutes passed dealing with the management of the Crown lands, and at last in 1829 the law on the subject was consolidated by 10 Geo. IV., cap. 50. This Act of Parliament covers sixty-three foolscap pages in print, and although a great part of it has since been repealed, or re-enacted, it remains the principal Act under which the present Commissioners of Crown lands exercise their powers, and some of its main provisions deserve particular notice.

Section 8 defines "the Possessions and Land Revenues "of the Crown to which this Act relates" as "All Honours, "Hundreds, Castles, Lordships, Manors, Forests, Chases, "Woods, Parks, Messuages, Lands, Tithes, Fisheries, Franchises, Services, Rents, and other Land Revenues, Posses“ sions, Tenements, and Hereditaments whatsoever

“ (Advowsons of Churches and Vicarages only excepted)
“ which now do belong to His Majesty, or hereafter “ shall belong to His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, “ within the Ordering and Survey of the Court of “ Exchequer in England or Wales, in Ireland, in the Isle “ of Man, and its Dependencies, and the Isle of Alderney, “ whether in Possession, Remainder, or Reversion.” It may be mentioned in passing that by the Acts 2 & 3
Will. IV., cap. 112, and 3 & 4 Will. IV., cap. 69, the Land Revenues of the Crown in Scotland were brought within the provisions of the principal Act.

By Section 9 the Commissioners are required to observe the directions of the Treasury “ not being contrary to the “ provisions of this Act,” and by Section 10 they have to swear that they “ will truly, honestly, faithfully and “ diligently execute the duties of their Office.”

Then follow precise instructions defining the Commissioners' powers and duties in respect of sales, purchases and leases, Section 25 providing that no part of the Royal Forests, Parks or Chases should be leased, and Section 61 requires a survey to be made in each case, with some trifling exceptions, and the surveyor has to swear that he has acted faithfully and impartially to the best of his skill and judgment.

By Sections 108 and 109 capital derived from sales or otherwise is to be applied in the purchase of land, but may be temporarily invested in the “ Three per Cents.,” now in any Trustee Stock.

Three years later, by 2 Will. IV., cap. 1, the Office of the Surveyor-General of His Majesty's Works and Public Buildings was united with the Office of His Majesty's Woods, Forests and Land Revenues, and this combination continued until 1851, when the two Offices were separated again by 14 & 15 Vict., cap. 42. Lord John Russell, the Prime Minister, in introducing the Bill said:—

“ Experience has shown that the combination of these Offices has led to the imposition of very large and undue charges on the Land Revenues of the Crown for the purpose of public works, and that the First Commissioner of Woods and Forests, being a person connected with a political party, is not so well fitted for the management of the Department of the Woods and Forests as a person would be who was totally unconnected with a political party. By this proposed separation we get rid of what has frequently happened, namely, that when large expenses have been incurred for certain public works, the sums were raised by making them a charge on the Land Revenues of the Crown, whereas the expense should rather have been thrown on the general revenue of the country. It was certainly calculated to keep from the public view the large expenses incurred in those cases. According to the statement I have now made, the Land Revenues will be in future managed as a Department of the Revenue. The persons employed in that Office will only have to consider how best to manage the rents they receive from that property which is leasehold; and they will have nothing to do with the consideration of any expenses, except such as any owner of property would think it necessary to incur for the preservation and improvement of his property."

By Section 22 of this Act all the "Royal Parks, Gardens and Possessions" in London and the suburbs (not including Windsor) were placed under the management of the Commissioners of Works, except that by Section 23 all premises within any of the Royal Parks, already leased or agreed to be leased, were to be managed by the Commissioners of Woods.

Amending Acts of no great public interest were passed in 1852, 1853, 1855, 1857, 1861, 1862, 1866, 1873, 1885, and 1894. But by the Crown Lands Act of 1906 the President of the Board of Agriculture and Fisheries was made ex officio a Commissioner of Crown Lands, contrary to the principle laid down by Lord John Russell, and approved by Parliament in 1851, that persons connected with a political party are not well fitted to manage the Crown estates. The object was avowedly political, namely, to assist the Government in carrying out its policy in regard to the creation of small-holdings. The result was certainly not to the disadvantage of the Crown estates. Lord Carrington, the President of the Board, though assuredly "a person connected with a political party," had a great knowledge of agriculture, and also a high sense of his duties as a trustee. Three essential principles were kept in view, viz., first, none but suitable land was taken for small-holdings ; secondly, none but suitable applicants were accepted as tenants ; and, thirdly, fair economic rents were charged in every case. There have been extraordinarily few failures among the small-holders farming under the Crown.

Opinions may differ on the question whether the same result could not have been achieved by other means without any change in the law. The appointment of the President of the Board (now the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries) as a Commissioner, however, has led to administrative difficulties which were not foreseen in 1906. A few years ago one of the Colleges at Oxford wished to buy some property from the Crown. The Minister, under the University and College Estates Act, before approving the purchase, had to satisfy himself that the price was not too high, and the same Minister, as Commissioner, had to satisfy himself that the price was not too low, but so indisputably reasonable and exact were the surveyors' valuations on both sides, that the purchase and the sale were approved without hesitation or controversy. On another occasion, as Commissioner, he granted to himself, as Minister, a lease of land for the purposes of a Farm Settlement, and a few years later, after keen negotiation between himself and himself, he agreed terms for the surrender of the lease.

In 1924, by the Forestry (Transfer of Woods) Act, provision was made for the transfer, subject to valuation, of the Crown woods and forests to the Forestry Commission by Order in Council, and woodlands, together with other property under the same local management adjacent thereto, valued at £1,679,000, were so transferred. Under a power provided by the same Act the title of the Commissioners of His Majesty's Woods, Forests and Land Revenues was changed to " Commissioners of Crown Lands."

In 1927 yet another Crown Lands Act (17 & 18 Geo. V., cap. 23) was passed, the main purpose and effect of which was to amend and simplify the law so as to place the Commissioners, for all practical purposes, in the position of trustees under the Settled Land Act, 1925, subject to the directions of the Treasury.

From the foregoing summary, which is by no means complete, it will be seen that a great amount of parliamentary time has been devoted to legislation affecting the hereditary landed estates of the Crown, more, perhaps, than to any other subject. And the end is not yet. There are still doubts to be removed, still difficulties for which the law at present provides no satisfactory solution, and it may be safely predicted that before very long Parliament will once more be asked to consider a Crown Lands Bill. Meanwhile, in view of the general ignorance which exists concerning the Crown lands, it may be useful to explain shortly their extent and distribution, and the powers and duties of the Commissioners who have to manage them.

In London the Crown owns practically all Regent Street, the greater part of Pall Mall and Cockspur Street, Carlton House Terrace and Carlton Gardens, the terraces surrounding Regent's Park, some forty acres east of Albany Street, now in course of redevelopment, a large estate adjoining Victoria Park, a considerable area in the Strand, Oxford Street, St. James's, Kensington, in the neighbourhood of Whitehall, and Grosvenor Road, besides a number of relatively small but valuable properties in other parts of the metropolis.

Outside London there are large building estates rapidly developing at Eltham and near Ilford, and a little further afield at Oxshott, Egham, and in the Windsor district, and substantial areas more or less fully developed at Dover, Hastings, and Portsmouth.

The agricultural estates in England are more than 100,000 acres in extent, and are distributed over twenty-two counties.

In Wales and Monmouth there are about 4,000 acres of agricultural land, the absolute property of the Crown, besides 77,000 acres of unenclosed waste land subject to common rights.

In Scotland the Crown owns nearly 30,000 acres, mostly low-rented farms and sheep-grazings, and all salmon fishings except those to which adverse title has been established.

The gross receipts from mines and quarries, mostly under-sea coal on the coasts of England and Scotland, granite and slate in Wales, granite in Alderney, and granite and limestone in the Isle of Man, amounted to more than £116,000 last year.

There are also miscellaneous sources of revenue such as foreshores, unimprovable rents, feu-duties, harbour-dues, &c.

The Windsor Parks and Woods are in a class by themselves. Both the Great Park and the Little Park, or Home Park (Private), are in the personal occupation of the King, but being part of the hereditary possessions of the Crown they come under the management of the Commissioners by virtue of Section 8 of the Crown Lands Act, 1829, quoted above, although the revenue derived from them is only incidental (sales of timber, &c.), and does not cover the costs of maintenance. The Great Park is more than 5,000 acres in extent, larger than all the London parks, including Richmond, Bushey and Hampton Court, put together. Most of it is open to the public, but this is a privilege by gracious permission of His Majesty, not a right. The Little Park is the private demesne of the Castle. Outside the parks there are some 6,000 acres of woodland and heath, a remnant of the old Windsor Forest, used partly for the growing of timber, partly for military manœuvres, and preserved for the amenity of the district. The difficulty and the cost of management of the Great Park and the Forest have been increased in recent years by the carelessness and wanton mischief of the public ; hundred of acres of young plantations have been burnt, miles of fences have been damaged, and cart-loads of broken glass and other litter have been left on the ground.

The gross revenue collected by the Commissioners of Crown lands in the year ended 31st March, 1932, was £1,835,238, and the gross expenditure was £552,657.

As has been explained above, the position of the Commissioners is similar to that of trustees under the Settled Land Act. Their powers and duties may be summarised as follows:—

First, they must preserve, and, if possible, increase the capital value of the estates entrusted to their charge, —for the benefit of the reversioner, the Crown.

Secondly, they must collect the revenues from those estates, and after defraying the costs of collection and management, they must pay the balance into the Exchequer,—for the benefit of the tenant for life, the public.

Thirdly, and generally, they must act reasonably, in accordance with the principles of good estate management.

This is a fair statement of the legal position in simple terms. It has often been said that it is a legal fiction, and that to describe the Crown as reversioner is really nonsense, for in no conceivable circumstances could the Crown resume the hereditary revenues, charged as they would be with the expenses of the Civil Government. It may be so, or it may not. Fifty, nay, fifteen years ago no one foresaw the state in which the world is to-day, and the present cost of the Civil Government of this country. What will be the state of the world, what will be the expenditure on the armed forces, and other public services, what, indeed, will be the meaning of money, fifteen or fifty years hence? No one can say. Parliament has insisted, not once only, but over and over again, that the Crown lands are to be held in trust, and so long as that is the law of the land the Commissioners will continue, “truly, honestly, faithfully and diligently” to obey it.

Like trustees in private life, they are from time to time bullied and cajoled in the hope that they will commit breaches of trust for the benefit of interested parties. That blessed word “reasonably” in their statutes allows them a certain amount of discretion, but this word must itself be interpreted reasonably. Its meaning depends on the circumstances of each case and cannot be precisely defined. The Treasury can be trusted to prevent any excessive generosity, and public opinion, expressed in Parliament and the Press, will unfailingly call the Commissioners to account for any real or imaginary infliction of hardship.

A strange belief exists in many minds, even among those who ought to know better, that the Commissioners of Crown lands can and do defy the laws which are binding on private landowners, and that they can and do treat their contracts as scraps of paper. It is true that the Crown is not bound by the provisions of a statute unless expressly named therein or included within the scope of its operation by necessary implication. But in all recent Acts affecting land the Crown is expressly named, e.g., the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1923, the Law of Property Act, 1925, the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, the Land Drainage Act, 1930, &c. Whether by inadvertence or design, the Rent Restriction Acts do not appear to bind the Crown, but the Commissioners, though sometimes tempted to prefer the principles of simple justice, have scrupulously acted in accordance with the provisions of those Acts as interpreted by the Courts. For obvious constitutional reasons, the laws enabling local authorities and other bodies to acquire land compulsorily do not apply to Crown lands, but, in practice, this fact makes no difference, except perhaps that ratepayers and others are saved some expense, for the Commissioners are always ready to sell on reasonable terms.

The truth of the matter is that the Crown lands are managed according to exactly the same principles of law and on exactly the same system as other great trust estates. Their only peculiar interest lies in their past history, inadequately summarised in the foregoing pages. The routine of their administration is dull and commonplace, except to those directly concerned with it. "Who are the Commissioners of Crown lands?" rhetorically asked a peevish scribe in a popular journal a few weeks ago, and did not wait for an answer; he supplied his own rhetorical answer, "No one knows." Anyone who wishes to know can easily find out who they are, but, apparently, no one cares, and therefore no one knows. So be it. The Commissioners neither seek nor shun publicity. They mind their own business, according to law. They have architects, surveyors and other experts of the highest professional standing to advise them, besides an unlimited number of honorary self-appointed advisers, both professional and amateur.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. A. S. GAYE's

CROWN LANDS.

Sir EDWIN SAVILL, O.B.E. (Past-President), said it was his pleasant duty to propose a vote of thanks to the author for an interesting and charming Paper. It was interesting because it gave a concise history of Crown lands from the days of the "Doomsday Book," and its charm was obvious to all those who had listened to it. There arose a difficulty, however; it was in the main a statement of historic facts, and there was not a great deal in it to engender a prolonged discussion. If the author had wished to do so, he could have read a Paper dealing with Crown lands which would have led to a full and perhaps bitter discussion, and personally he would suggest for a future occasion such subjects as "Are the rents in Regent Street adequate?" or "Is it advisable to commercialise Carlton House Terrace?" Those subjects, however, had not been touched upon by the author, and he therefore thought that the members were debarred from introducing them into the debate on the present occasion.

It might be amusing to consider whether King George III. made a good bargain when in 1760 he surrendered the Crown lands, which then produced an income of £11,000 and which now produced a net income of about £1,300,000. But, after all, King George III. was, like Queen Anne, dead, and he would turn to the more profitable topics which would be found towards the end of the Paper, where the powers and duties of the Commissioners were set out.

The management of the Crown lands was a huge undertaking. He supposed that to all those under him the author was more or less in the position that was occupied by the clients of those members of The Institution who managed large estates. He was, with the temporary Minister of Agriculture, for the purpose of estate management, virtually the owner. They received technical advice from their subordinates, but it was for them to make the ultimate decision, in the same way as the private owner who was advised by a member of The Institution.

The author's responsibility was enormous, and the fact that in the course of years there had been so little public criticism of the management of Crown estates redounded greatly to his credit. The extent of the Crown lands had been mentioned in the Paper. He believed the agricultural lands in England and Wales were about 140,000 acres, and there were also very valuable properties in the heart of London, and an extensive area of suburban building and prospective building land.

Many of those present had responsibilities. Personally he had the management of some 160 acres in Inner London, besides a good deal of agricultural land, and he was not sure that, if he were setting out the duties of an estate manager, he would not put first the third point mentioned by the author, namely, to act reasonably in accordance with the principles of good estate management. He would like to insert the word "and" after "reasonably," so as to emphasise the first essential in the management of every large property. "Reasonably," as Mr. Gaye had said, could not be defined. It had to be interpreted as one went along, and he agreed that the best people to interpret that word were those who were continually meeting difficulties of the kind in question, namely, chartered surveyors. The future of an estate the leases of which were just running out was, he thought, one of the most difficult tasks a surveyor had to undertake.

He was not a great believer in town planning for the distant future except in regard to the lay-out of roads. It was impossible to tell what was going to happen even ten years hence, and when he saw the changes which had taken place in neighbourhoods during his lifetime, he was quite sure that anyone who set out to decide who should live in any particular place was imposing upon himself a hopeless task ; it could not be done.

The planning of roads, however, was a different matter. One might pause and consider what had been done many years ago on the Grosvenor estate, with its huge squares and open spaces ; the Paddington estate, with its squares and terraces ; and the Eyre estate, with its wide roads, and pleasant houses and gardens. The user of the houses on those estates might change, but the wide roads, the squares and the terraces were secured for ever, and personally he had yet to see a modern town planning scheme which would compare in any way with the West End of London, where, he supposed, the estates to which he had referred had all been laid out before the expressions "town planning" or "zoning" had ever been heard of.

The Whitechapel Road, in particular, was another example ; how that road could have been laid out in those days of such a width was something to marvel at.

He was afraid he had rather digressed from the subject, because he was discussing the difficulty of managing, according to the best principles of estate management, the estates which surveyors had under their control, as circumstances cropped up from day to day. They had to overcome those difficulties as best they could, and even in their comparatively small jobs they found those difficulties very great, so what must the author find them to be in his colossal job, even with the assistance of the temporary Minister of Agriculture?

There had been some talk recently of putting the management of the Crown lands under a Government department. To his mind that would be absolutely fatal. No Government department could manage estates of that nature, and so long as gentlemen like the author could be found who would manage the estates with such ability, tact and courtesy, he thought matters had far better be left as they were. He was sure the members would wish him to congratulate him on the success of his work, and to thank him for his kindness in having given a history of the lands and properties under his management.

Sir JOHN OAKLEY, G.B.E. (Past-President), in seconding the vote of thanks, said that he was particularly desirous of knowing what the author was going to say in the Paper because he happened to have been a member of the Committee that was appointed by the Treasury in 1920 to deal with Crown and Government lands. The terms of reference to that Committee were: "To examine the question of concentrating in one department all Government purchases and sales of land and buildings, and the management of the Estates of the Crown and Government Properties." That Committee was under the chairmanship of the late Sir Howard Frank, and had among its members the late Hon. E. G. Strutt, thus embracing three representatives of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution. The Committee reported in 1922. One of the principal recommendations made by the Committee was that there should be established a Central Lands Department, embracing all necessary professional services for dealing with Government and Crown properties. The underlying reasons recommended were ones of economy and efficiency. It would be seen from the author's Paper that, in connection at any rate with the Crown lands, certain overlapping of management had been removed of late years.

In opposition to the views of Sir Edwin Savill he was still of the same opinion as when he signed the Report, namely, that it would be advantageous if something in the nature of a Central Lands Department under a Board of Management, responsible, of course, to the Treasury, could be instituted, to deal with all questions where professional advice was necessary in the nature of valuing and surveying attaching both to Government and Crown Lands. There would have to be certain reservations in connection with administration, more particularly in connection with Government lands. Those were dealt with in the Report.

Another matter to which the Committee drew attention was the absence of the necessary professional assistance employed by the Commissioners in connection with the management of Crown properties in London. At that time the evidence before the Committee was that the only assistance available was the part-time services of an architect and surveyor in private practice, assisted by one whole-time technical adviser on the staff of the Office of Woods and Forests. Within quite a short period before the Committee sat, there had been certain special cases referred to the Chief Valuer of the Inland Revenue Valuation Office, and he gathered from what Mr. Gaye had said that probably that course had been subsequently more freely adopted. He was quite satisfied that the Committee were justified in the criticisms made, and he was very glad to see that, towards the end of the Paper, the author had said in a general way that the Commissioners had now at their command for advice architects, surveyors and other experts of the highest professional standing.

The author also said that the aim of the Commissioners was to manage Crown lands legally and practically on the same system as other great trust estates, and he previously summarised their powers and duties. He thought it would be agreed that, if the estates were administered, as he had every reason to believe they were, in accordance with the conditions which the author had explained, and in accordance with the Settled Land Act of 1925, that was the position which had to be adopted in the management of trust estates, which surveyors had either to manage or to advise upon. That being so, there should not be any difficulty in dealing with the complicated matters that came before the Commissioners, if they had sufficient advice, even when they had to deal with such matters as the question of fair rents.

In connection with trust estates many surveyors had very considerable difficulties to deal with from time to time, and he thought it would be agreed that those engaged in such work occasionally made mistakes, some of which could not be foreseen. Fortunately for many of them, however, their work was not performed before the eye of the public or of Parliament, and probably they would say "Thank goodness it is not!"

He wished to emphasise the point that if more information was given to the general public as to the methods of administration adopted by the Commissioners there would be less criticism. The Commissioners were trustees for a public trust, and he could not see that there could be anything improper in letting the public know in a general way the line of action of the Commissioners, by whom they were advised, and so forth. The author had said that the Commissioners had taken advice, but the general public did not know who gave that advice. He threw that out as a suggestion in the belief that if the Commissioners adopted a policy of wider publicity it would be to the interest and benefit of all concerned.

MR. STANLEY EDGSON (Chartered Surveyor), after paying a tribute to the delightful and disarming quality of Mr. Gaye's remarks, said that he had come to the meeting to ask if the Commissioners could be somewhat more approachable as landlords, thus to enable surveyors to approach them more readily with a view to discussing their mutual problems. Members had had an opportunity of seeing the author in person and of hearing his practical views, a fact which would tend to disarm those surveyors who had the idea that the Commissioners were among the most unapproachable landlords in London.

Even so, it might be of advantage if surveyors could have some readier means of getting into contact with him than they had at present. He found that with other large landlords to-day he was able to approach to the technical adviser, if he had an interesting problem, and to discuss fully and frankly values and figures to the last detail. He did not think, however, that that applied in the same way to the Crown as to other large landlords.

It was difficult to administer such vast and varied estates as those of the Crown, not only in the sense that the Commissioners were merely in the position of trustees, but also because they were surrounded by a traditional atmosphere of aloofness. It seemed to him rather regrettable that, in the present democratic age, the Crown lands should be aloof from so much of the ordinary legislation that applied to the man in the street and to other municipal and official bodies. It had been represented, for instance, that the Crown could not be subject to the Acquisition of Lands Act or town planning, or many ordinary statutes of Parliament, the majority of which exempted Crown lands. But as the Crown really was symbolical of the public in the sense that the public were the tenants for life, he thought it would be very desirable, and would very much strengthen the happy relationship between landlord and tenant, if the Crown would subject itself to the ordinary routine and provisions of those statutes.

As regarded the proposed Central Lands Department, it would be found that many large London estates were, as a rule, in the hands of a Board, two or three members of which were invariably technical men, fully conversant with the values and conditions prevailing in their particular area. Frequently the Board were controlled, either under Act of Parliament or otherwise, by trustees, who invariably adopted the advice given by that Board to the trustees.

Some such system as that, which had been recommended by the Commission, would undoubtedly, in his judgment, be a move in the right direction.

MR. FRANCIS PETER (Member of Council) wished to dissociate himself entirely from that large body of self-appointed advisers to whom the author referred in his Paper. He had a rather uneasy feeling that the Commissioners still had some connection with the public executioner, and he therefore thought it was necessary to speak rather carefully or without prejudice.

He often envied the series of outworks which the Crown administration possessed as a defence against the disgruntled tenant, if such there were on the Crown estates. First of all there would be the outpost from the land agent's office in London, then the office itself, and, if he got through that, he might get to the office of the Commissioners. Finally there would be that impregnable redoubt, the Treasury. Fortunately there were those agents, of great professional ability, who were able to meet the tenants and to take a great deal of responsibility in meeting them, and therefore there was no need for the tenants to get as far as the redoubt he had mentioned, the Treasury, where they would assuredly die.

There was one matter which was important from an agricultural point of view, and that was the tenant's liability for the cost of labour in the maintenance of the buildings on their farms. Before the War that was not a very serious matter, but it was very different now. Labour of the type in question had to be paid for at rates which were double the pre-War rates, or, perhaps more, and, what was worse, the village handyman, who did all sorts of jobs at small cost, was now a rara avis.

He hoped that the Minister of Agriculture, as a Commissioner of Crown Lands, might be able to further to some extent the schemes for the improvement of live-stock. With the breaking up of large estates and the relinquishment of home farms, the smaller tenant-farmers had no opportunity of obtaining inexpensive pedigree sires, with the result that the cattle of this country were depreciating in quality every year. There was not the slightest doubt about that. When the late Mr. Tate, who was manager of the Royal Farm at Windsor, took his pluck in his hands, against the advice of the Office of Works at that time, and brought down the great bull "Field Marshal" from Scotland, he did the greatest thing that was ever done for English agriculture in the live-stock line. England was now suffering from a lack of "Field Marshals" and their like.

He would have liked the author, if he had had time, to touch upon the personalities of those old Commissioners and surveyors who managed to get such lucrative positions for themselves. Looking through the old records of his own district, he found that the landowner not only appointed a steward of the manor, or various stewards of the manors, but also employed a surveyor, usually a very eminent man in his business. Those surveyors were usually called in to carry out the very delicate negotiations that were necessary when land could not be taken by force of arms. Often the surveyor was a parish priest, who worked over very wide districts, and was a man of considerable eminence in the profession. Evidently in the early thirteenth century an estate agent was chosen for his piety and moral character, in the same way as he was at the present time! The "Berkeley Papers" told them that "Hugh Dennis and "others took a survey of the lord's estates by his desire, "and though their pains were not great, they were largely "rewarded with one or more of these best estates." Therefore it would be seen that the profession of surveyor in the time of Edward VI. was a good one! But—why he did not know, and perhaps, the author, with his records, would be able to say—in the reign of Queen Elizabeth the pay had come down to 6s. 8d. a day.

He hoped that the author, if he ever read another Paper before The Institution, might be able to tell them something more of those and similar things from the unique records that his department must possess.

Mr. PERCY J. WALDRAM (Chartered Surveyor) said that before mentioning the points he had intended to raise on the printed Paper he would refer briefly to what the author had said in his introductory remarks about reclamation on the Wash. Having been assistant chief engineer of the Wainfleet Scheme near Gibraltar Point, he would like to point out that the cost of the scheme was incurred in the expensive years just after the War. At that time the value of the extremely fertile land which was being reclaimed from the Wash was very high. He had known villagers who had bought reclaimed land at £225 an acre by auction, and thought they had done well over it. It must also be remembered that the area reclaimed was only one part of a very much larger scheme for reclaiming the whole belt of foreshore from Wainfleet right down to Boston. If therefore the capital expense which was represented in the £70 per acre referred to, incurred for a very much larger scheme, had been spread over that complete scheme before the greater part of it was abandoned, the cost per acre would have been much less.

The Commissioners of Crown Lands were not, like other property owners, legally bound to respect prescriptive rights of light and air acquired after twenty years' user by neighbouring properties. The Crown was not mentioned in Section 3 of the Prescription Act, which dealt with rights of light and air, although it was specifically cited in Section 2, which dealt with prescriptive rights of way. The Courts had held that for that reason neighbours had no rights of light against the Crown unless they were in a position to prove either a specific grant or immemorial user going back to the time of Richard I. He was under the impression, however, that an undertaking was given by a Minister some four or five years ago to the effect that that right of the Crown would not be insisted upon. He might be wrong, but if the author could enlighten them it would be useful, because the Crown Lands Department was not the only one involved. The Post Office, the Admiralty, the War Office and the Office of Works were all in the same boat. With respect to the Post Office, there was, of course, special statutory provision whereby damages could be recovered by arbitration, but other Government departments holding and managing land and buildings were not, he understood, under any obligation to respect anybody's rights. The point he wished to raise particularly was the following: If the Crown was not liable under the Act, could the Crown take advantage of the Act? In other words, was it not a fact that neighbouring properties could, with complete impunity, be rebuilt to obstruct Crown premises to any extent, save in cases where the Commissioners were in a position to prove either a specific grant or immemorial user? That point had been raised in a letter to the Times of 7th January.

He regretted the reference made by the author at the end of the Paper to "self-appointed advisers, both professional "and amateur," and feared that the effect of those words might be to reduce the present discussion to a murmur of polite admiration. Of course the Crown lands constituted a very large estate—doubtless the largest—but, as compared with the aggregate of other large estates managed almost entirely by members of The Institution, they were comparatively insignificant. One would have thought that the Commissioners would have welcomed the opportunity of learning the considered and collective opinions of The Institution. The words rather suggested, to his mind, that criticism was unwelcome.

Although it was desirable that certain matters which were very much before the public eye should not be mentioned, it should not be overlooked that all large estates—Crown lands not exempted—were nothing more than shops. They had goods to sell—land, accommodation, buildings, minerals, and so forth. The public were the buyers, and in the case of Crown lands the shareholders also. If they sold well, the public benefited; if they sold badly, the public lost. Therefore the public, if they thought that things were not going right, had not only a right but a duty to criticise.

It was with considerable regret that he had noticed a suggestion that in the case now being much discussed the interests of existing lessees had not been properly considered. Consideration of existing lessees was a vital matter in estate management, and any suggestion that the Crown Commissioners did not so regard it should be dispelled as quickly as possible in the interests of the public purse. Estate management depended for its success upon whether the directing heads had the small shop-keeping mind, intent on immediate profits, or the large shop-keeping mind, which sought for the satisfied customer and a reputation for absolutely straight dealing. This country had been called a nation of shopkeepers, and he thanked heaven for that, because it had at least enabled us as a nation to make our word our bond. When a shop sold a customer something which subsequently proved to be different from what it was intended to appear, the customer never went to that establishment again, nor to any of its branches. The transaction might have been legal, but, commercially, it was idiotic.

It was precisely the same with large estates. If an estate took large sums for long leases in an exclusive residential district, and then allowed itself to be tempted by still larger sums to allow other people to destroy the amenities of that district, it might be legally right, but commercially it was idiotic. The estate leases might have stipulated that all light and air was only enjoyed on sufferance ; the estate might never have promised not to allow noisy factories or fried-fish shops, and might be able to tell its lessees that they had their remedies against nuisance in the Courts (although they must, of course, go on paying the same old high rents) and be perfectly within its rights, but unwise nevertheless. Would there not then be a strong inclination on the part of the public never to touch a lease or property on that estate if they could possibly find anything elsewhere, less suitable or more costly though it might be?

It had often been his duty to advise a great estate on matters of light and air, not as between the estate and outsiders, but as between old lessees, legally helpless under their leases, and prospective purchasers of building leases for large new properties, capable of bearing ground rents which were not only large but huge. The chief question—in fact, almost the only question—that he was ever asked to report upon was as to whether the old lessees affected would have had a reasonable grievance if they had the full rights of independent owners. If they had, then the proposed new building must be and was refused or reduced, with a corresponding reduction of the large new monetary return. The estate realised that the market value of its wares, and its ability to command the best and soundest class of customer, could be vitally affected by its reputation, or its want of reputation, for absolutely straight dealing.

He would be very sorry if anything he had said caused the author to include him or any member of The Institution in the class of "self-appointed advisers." He did not think the trouble lay with the Commissioners ; he thought it lay in the Treasury mind. The Treasury mind was essentially obsessed by the problems of each financial year, and it was difficult indeed for the Treasury to take the long views necessary for profitable estate management. Still, there were wise heads at the Treasury, and sometimes a word to the wise was sufficient.

Colonel H. C. COLE, C.B.E. (Member of Council), reminded those present that there was such a thing as the Official Secrets Act. It must be assumed that officials were trying to do their job as best they could, but they were tongue tied. They were not allowed to reply to criticisms, and therefore were in a difficult position when a critic alluded to things that were not done or that ought to be done. Similarly it was very difficult for him to discuss the Paper or touch upon those details in which surveyors were chiefly interested. He, for example, was not allowed to state the number of agricultural tenants of the War Office who owed rent for considerable periods, or how they came to the department, or what the department had done or recommended should be done for them.

He believed that down to the days of Queen Anne the War Department estates and the estates under the control of the author's predecessors were one and the same thing. Until 1708 the King provided his own lands for his own army, but in that year there was passed an Act, which he believed was one of the first, for the compulsory acquisition of land for public purposes, and which appointed Commissioners to treat and agree for land required for military purposes. It also warned people, in the curious language of the day, that "as regards any proprietors designing to obstruct the Public Service or to make unreasonable gain to themselves or insisting on Extravagant Rates" the "usual methods" would be taken. The "usual methods" were not defined, although he supposed that the official arbitrator of that day was different from the days of William II. However, if an agreement could not be reached a jury was empanelled.

In looking up the old Papers he found that agricultural land was usually awarded at the rate of 33 years' purchase on the net rent, while for building land, curiously enough, 40 years' purchase was given. There was a provision in one of the Acts protecting the Commissioners against penalties in force under an Act of Charles II. against Popish recusants. They had heard that the parish priest was usually the surveyor in earlier years, and apparently in latter day the authorities thought that a good Catholic might be a bad citizen but a good surveyor. Later on another Act was passed under which the War Department bought land in Chatham and other places. It might be of interest to members to know that seventy or eighty years ago the War Department were buying land near Rochester, and a certain Mr. John Oakley, of 10, Waterloo Place, acted as arbitrator. Mr. Robert Lake Cobb acted for the Wardens of Rochester Bridge and the Dean and Chapter of Rochester Cathedral, and Messrs. Cluttons acted for the War Department. Mr. Robert Lake Cobb claimed £2,500 17s. 2d. in one case and £781 5s. 3d. in another case, and he got every penny of it! It might further interest the members to know that the amalgamated firm of Messrs. Cobb & Oakley sold some of that very property for the War Office only four weeks ago.

He believed that the War Office were the owners of even a larger area of land than that under the control of the author. It consisted of approximately a quarter of a million acres, of which 20,000 or 30,000 acres were abroad, in Egypt, China, Malta, Gibraltar, and other places. Occasionally the War Office had to buy land from the Crown, and, whatever the critics might say about prices, he had found that the Crown advisers were fully capable of looking after the great trust which had been given to them.

The estate of the War Office was not probably so valuable as that of the Crown; it had no such places as Carlton House Terrace, thank goodness! but it had had its Surrey commons. A year or two ago Punch honoured the War Office with a cartoon on that subject, and the Secretary of State received the heads of every political group in the country, with the result that it all worked out all right. The War Office had then all the advice it wanted, unasked and unpaid! He could give an assurance that the infantry soldier, manœuvring on Surrey commons, did not, as it was said he would, raise his rifle to bring down the pheasant he had put up in his military exercises. Although perhaps he had laughed a little about the advice received, undoubtedly the knowledge that the whole time there was an unseen critic was a good thing; it was a very useful urge in their work and in their duties. After all, what the War Office and the Crown Commissioners were trying to do was to take good care of the business entrusted to them. That business had been so entrusted by the British public, and all the authorities could hope to do was the best in their power acting fairly and reasonably according to the law.

With regard to the Committee of which Sir John Oakley was a member, and which was appointed to consider the question of amalgamating the administration of all Government lands in one department, his view was that as the administration was so tied up with the particular functions of each department, which, as a rule, was not the management of lands only but also the training of forces, and so on, it would be quite impossible to carry through the suggestion.

MR. FRANK HUNT, C.V.O. (Member of Council), said he thought all the members owed their thanks to the author for his interesting summary of the history of the Crown lands, and that probably the author was grateful to The Institution for the opportunity of making so clear what he conceived to be the principles upon which those estates were managed. The Crown, which was always used as a reason why certain things were done, was put in the position of reversioner, but the public was the more immediate one, because they, as the author said, were the tenants for life.

The author further said that the principles governing the management of Crown lands were those of good estate management. He had heard it said, and possibly claimed, on behalf of the Commissioners administering those lands that they were above the law which normally affected all the rest of the estates in the kingdom. He remembered a discussion on the last of the Crown Lands Acts as to why Crown lands should be outside the normal purview of town planning. Again, in the Town Planning Bill of 1932 an endeavour was made to subject Crown lands to the same control as the rest of the land in the kingdom. For some reason or other, however, what was good enough for the rest of the lands in the kingdom was apparently too good for the lands administered by the Crown Lands Commissioners. Perhaps the author, without getting into trouble under the Official Secrets Act, would be able in his reply to give some indication why that was.

The second point made by the author was that no local authority need feel anxious about the price of land required for public purposes because the Commissioners always acted in a reasonable manner. But supposing there were two opinions as to reasonableness, who was to determine the question? Again, he seemed to remember the department had not been prepared to submit to arbitration a question of difference as to the reasonableness of the price asked. He remembered that in one case where that did happen counsel said, probably speaking on the instructions of the department or the Treasury, that it was the first case in which the Crown had ever submitted to the determination of an arbitrator the question of compensation to be paid for land taken from them for a public purpose. He had a recollection that the claim was something of the order of £50,000, and the award of the arbitrator was just a few pounds—£300 perhaps—over £40,000. That might have been the only case of its kind, but it did seem strange that, when some of the public wanted something, a department acting for the Government, which had been described as being the public, was not prepared normally to submit a case of difference of opinion to the determination of an arbitrator.

The same thing applied with regard to town planning. He still believed there were cases in which it was claimed on behalf of the department that land in the Crown ought not to be the subject of town planning. There was a specific power that they might agree to make a scheme. There might be something in the matter that he failed to understand, and perhaps the author might be able to help him and other members by throwing light on the position.

The PRESIDENT said it would be remembered that the Royal Commission reported in effect that it had heard a good deal of evidence showing dissatisfaction on the part of the Crown tenants to the then management of Crown lands. He was not going to make any comments upon that, but he thought there was a good deal to be said for the recommendation of the Royal Commission to which Sir John Oakley had referred and with which, he believed, The Institution then agreed, namely, the appointment of a Board of Management and a Central Lands Department. The effect of that would be that, if the War Office or the Crown or any other semi-public or public body had an estate in the county of X, all the Crown valuations and management and sales and purchases of all the public or Crown properties in that county would be under one direction and under one management, and there would thus be decentralisation up to the top. Personally he was one of those who favoured the recommendation of the Royal Commission at the time, and he was glad to hear that Sir John Oakley had not changed his mind about it.

It was very good of the author, especially in the present circumstances, to come and address The Institution on the subject of Crown lands. The author had been much too modest in his valuation of the Paper, which he was sure everyone present had found most informative and most interesting. They had all been very much impressed by the admirable address the author had given and by the way in which he gave it.

The vote of thanks was put to the meeting and carried with acclamation.

Mr. A. S. GAYE, C.B., O.B.E., in a brief reply said he was grateful for the response to the generous vote of thanks. His official position prevented him from saying as much as he would like.

With regard to the arbitration to which Mr. Hunt referred, his recollection was that his department won and Mr. Hunt lost. He was quite content to have all the facts published.

With regard to town planning and the position of the Crown under it, shortly the position was this, that the child could not be given compulsory powers over its parents! He was grateful to Colonel Cole for the defence made by him for public servants.

He was sorry if the last words of his Paper caused offence to anybody ; they were added when he was correcting the proof, and, perhaps, they were not well chosen. The Commissioners did have a certain number of self-appointed advisers, amateurs whose services would not be regarded with favour by anybody who happened to be in a similar position to that of the Commissioners.

Mr. GAYE, having ascertained that Mr. Waldram was referring to the reclamation of the Wash in 1919, said that he was referring to an enclosure made in 1924, 1925 and 1926, when 320 acres were enclosed under a Government scheme. He would be very glad to afford anyone present facilities for seeing the full details.

With regard to the Prescription Act, he thought it would be dangerous to assume that the Crown had no rights against its neighbours.

Mr. Peter raised one point of great importance, namely, the liability upon agricultural tenants to supply labour for the maintenance of their farm buildings. That, in his opinion, gave the tenant a responsible interest in looking after his buildings. At the same time he recognised that the cost of labour was much higher than it was when some of the agreements were entered into, and in practice the Commissioners in many cases carried out very expensive repairs without making any call on the tenant to pay for any part of the labour.

Mr. Edgson suggested that permanent Commissioners of Crown lands might be more accessible, and he would refer Mr. Edgson to Sir Edwin Savill's very kind speech. Sir Edwin recognised that the management of 140,000 acres of agricultural land, apart from a very large part of London, and quarries and mines, and so forth, all over the country, did take up a good deal of time. Personally he felt it to be his duty to keep in contact with the agricultural tenants as far as possible. He thought it was much the most important part of his work that the relationship of personal landlord and tenant should be maintained. Whilst he was in London nobody ever asked to come and see him without having an appointment fixed for him very shortly afterwards. Generally speaking, however, he thought it was for the professional man on the one side to see the professional man on the other, and for the lay client and the landlord or his representative to see one another.

Sir John Oakley referred to another important constitutional question that he could not go into, and that was the effect of the bargain made between the Crown and the State over the Civil List. It was perfectly true that the income from Crown lands had increased enormously, whereas the amount payable to the Sovereign under recent Civil List Acts had remained more or less stationary, but the surrender of the revenues from Crown lands was not the only consideration in the grant of the Civil List, and if the Sovereign did resume the Crown lands and the revenues therefrom, he would find them charged with heavier burdens, at present at any rate, than he could discharge. He hoped it would be many years before another Civil List Act was passed.

The meeting then terminated.

PAPER 545.

THE ASSESSMENT OF DILAPIDATION AND SIMILAR CLAIMS : Some Practical Notes.

By Dudley B. King (Professional Associate).

*To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The

These notes are an attempt to approach the subject from a different angle to that taken by previous writers, who have dealt mainly with the legal aspects of the matter. Though I shall necessarily have to consider that side of the subject, briefly, my object is to review the whole process of assessing claims in respect of the lack of repair of, or damage caused to, buildings, including notes on the practical matters of survey, measurement, and pricing. After writing the first draft of this Paper, I noticed a considerable similarity of plan to Mr. Slater's admirable Paper read in 1916, but I think his matter and mine are sufficiently diverse to avoid any appreciable digging of the same ground. Though dealing chiefly with claims in respect of breach of covenant to repair, as between lessor and lessee, I hope a few notes on the assessment of claims for damage by fire and storm, so far as buildings are concerned, will not be without interest.

Before commencing detailed consideration of our subject I should like to call attention to a practice which I rather gather is on the increase, namely, the putting of dilapidation claims into the hands of builders for settlement, several of the leading London firms of contractors being willing to undertake such work for a remuneration of  $2\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on the amount, but on the understanding that they shall be given an opportunity of tendering for (possibly, even, a definite promise of receiving) any work which may subsequently be carried out. Though experienced builders' estimators are usually well qualified to measure and value the works in question, they do not as a rule possess much knowledge of the law or of recent legislation affecting its application, and this, taken together with the commercial interest in the amount of the claim which they can hardly help having, seems to me a sufficient reason why the public should employ professional assistance if they want to be sure of having such matters properly dealt with. Members of our profession should therefore do what they can to encourage the public in this, not only by tactfully making known the protection which skilled services can afford, but by aiming at an ever higher standard of knowledge, and so helping to justify and retain that faith in "the qualified man" which is the life-blood of the professions. It cannot be denied that there is nowadays much more knowledge on the part of the general public of matters which were formerly the monopoly of those initiated into the "art and mystery" of the professions, a very real reason for constant "aliveness" and progress on the part of the latter. I hope you will pardon this little digression from the immediate subject, but those of you who may have seen some of the correspondence which took place recently in The Builder on the subject of whether it was "worth while" to employ an architect in building a small house will not underestimate the warning I have tried to convey, which warning is applicable to many other professional activities besides those under review.

The subject of these notes is the assessment of claims, and I shall not therefore deal with "interim" schedules and questions relating thereto. Also I shall have in mind claims of fair magnitude and complexity, such as could not be handled satisfactorily by the surveyor without some specialised knowledge. After dealing with dilapidation claims I hope to have space for a few brief notes on fire damage and other claims, as these involve very similar principles of assessment.

DILAPIDATION CLAIMS.

The legal side of the subject has been handled by others more authoritatively than I can hope to handle it, but I should like to include just a few notes thereon under the first sub-heading of this section ("Perusal of documents") as there have been one or two interesting cases since the last Paper on dilapidations was published in our "Journal." Everyone who undertakes the assessment of dilapidation claims should be clear in his own mind as to the main legal principles in question or he will probably become involved in serious difficulties, to say nothing of wasting time through measuring and scheduling work for which he cannot sustain a claim, or omitting to include work for which he had a legitimate claim.

The methodical handling of a claim for dilapidations comprises three more or less well-defined steps:—

- (a) Perusal of the documents and consideration of the liabilities of the parties ;
- (b) The work "on the premises," namely, the preparation or checking (as the case may be) of the schedule, and the measuring of the work ; and
- (c) The "working up" of the figures in the office, and the final negotiation of the claim ; and I propose to consider our subject under those sub-headings.

(a) PERUSAL OF DOCUMENTS: LIABILITY.

The first step is, of course, examination of the lease, but it is always as well to enquire whether there are any other papers or correspondence which may modify, or throw further light upon, the position of the parties. From experience I have found it advisable always to make a copy of the repairing covenant or covenants in one's measuring book, and in ink. Leases are often bulky and awkward documents to carry about on the premises. For similar reasons a tracing or copy of any plan on or attached to the lease is frequently helpful.

Particular care should be taken to ascertain whether any claims for reinstatement will arise in respect of alterations made during the term, either by formal licence or by an arrangement set out in correspondence. The removal or addition of an internal partition-wall is perhaps the most frequent example of an alteration of this sort.

The precise form of wording of the repairing covenants is of great importance. For example, an express covenant for periodical painting may require the repainting to be carried out "once in every three years" or "in every third year." If there is no stipulation that it shall be carried out during the last year of the term in any case, then, under the first form of wording, painting could not be claimed if the lessee had carried it out at any time during the concluding triennial period unless the paintwork had since become in so bad a condition as to bring it within the operation of the "general" covenant. Similarly, where a lease containing a covenant to paint during a particular year has been surrendered before that year has been attained, only such painting (if any) as is necessary by virtue of the general covenant to keep in good repair can be claimed.

The unsatisfactory nature of the type of covenant which requires the premises to be delivered up in the same or in no worse condition than they were in at the commencement of the term, particularly in the absence of a schedule or description of such original condition, has been emphasised by previous writers, and I can only add that the practice still continues. It seems to me that when claims have to be settled in those difficult circumstances, the age and character of the buildings should be given special consideration, and I believe it has been held that, in the case of a long term, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary, reasonably good condition at the commencement of the term should be assumed.

The surveyor must not overlook the fact that a general covenant to keep a house and grounds in good order and condition will extend to such matters as the gravelling of drives and paths, pruning of fruit trees, maintenance of shrubs, and so on. In the case of Horlick v. Scully (Chancery Division, 1927) heavy damages, amounting to £395, were awarded in respect of a lessee's omission to clear ornamental lakes of mud and silt, the covenant in his lease extending to the keeping in order of "grounds and ornamental lakes." Incidentally this case shows how essential it is to examine every part of the demised premises; few people — perhaps not every surveyor — would realise the potentialities of ornamental lakes in connection with such heavy damages.

The lease should always be completely read through, however voluminous and wordy, for it may contain wording, possibly at some point quite remote from the repairing covenants, which will seriously influence the position of the parties regarding dilapidations. Sometimes covenants are included for the carrying out by the lessee of specified additions or alterations; or there may be references to fixtures or fittings, with or without schedules thereof.

Before leaving this sub-heading I should like to touch briefly on one or two legal points, including two interesting cases decided in the Courts since our last Paper on dilapidations. There is that constant cause of misunderstanding, the "fair wear and tear" exception. Lessees frequently have a greatly exaggerated idea as to the effect of such a clause, and unless the surveyor is clear in his own mind as to its true effect, and can explain matters to a lessee for whom he is acting, he may leave such a client in doubt as to whether his case is being adequately contested.

In Haskell and Another v. Marlow and Others (King's Bench Division, 1927) the surveyor acting for the executors of a widow who had been the life-tenant of a house for 42 years under a general repairing covenant with a "fair wear and tear" exception thought that his client was only liable to make good damage such as amounted to voluntary waste, and he assessed her liability at £97. The surveyor to the trustees maintained that the obligation of the widow had been to do all such repairs as a reasonably careful householder would do to prevent the operation of decay, and his claim for £500 damages was upheld, both on the first hearing of the case and on appeal. I think a quotation from Mr. Justice Salter's summing up may be illuminating. He said:—

“ The contention has been made that the words ‘ fair ’ and ‘ reasonable ’ qualified both the destructive agencies that did the damage as well as the dilapidations they brought about. Such words, it had also been argued, could be used to qualify human user, but they could not be used to qualify the forces of nature. It would be unreasonable to speak of a ‘ fair rain ’ or an ‘ unreasonable frost.’ In his opinion they related both to the destructive agency and also the dilapidations that were caused, including the dilapidations for which exemption was claimed. In order to bring the dilapidations within the protection of such an exemption two things must be shown ; (1) that the dilapidations were caused by the normal human user or by the normal action of the elements, and (2) that they were reasonable in amount having regard to the terms of the contract to repair. In this case there was an omission to repair over 42 years, for the widow had simply failed to take steps to counteract the natural destructive qualities of the elements.”

That seems to me to put the position regarding “ fair wear and tear ” very clearly, and to indicate that if a lessee who holds under such a covenant allows the wear and tear to become abnormal in degree—such as by failing, for example, to repaper walls for so long a period that the paper becomes really begrimed (even though not torn or “ damaged ”)—then he loses the protection of the fair wear and tear exception so far as that particular item of repair is concerned. It follows consistently with that view that the shorter the tenancy the greater, proportionally, will be the effect of such an exception.

One popular misconception appears to be that damage caused by storms and natural forces can be considered fair wear and tear, and a case was actually contested in Court by a lessee of a seaside bungalow, holding under a general repairing covenant with "fair wear and tear" exception, on the ground that he was not liable for making good damage caused by high wind and rough sea. It is to be hoped he did not contest the case on the advice of a surveyor!

Another point which must be remembered is that a "fair wear" exception attached to the general covenant does not, of course, diminish liability under any specific covenant the lease may contain, such as for periodical painting with a specified number of coats.

Another extremely interesting case was Calthorpe v. McOscar, in which it was held, on appeal, that where the class of tenant inhabiting a number of houses had deteriorated greatly since the granting of the lease, the lessee could not escape liability for a large proportion of the dilapidations simply because the repairs in question consisted of items such as the tenants (occupiers of single rooms or floors, mostly on a weekly basis) would not consider necessary. The lessor's surveyor took the view—and I think rightly—that the hypothetical "reasonably minded" tenant (vide Proudfoot v. Hart) in such a case should be a person prepared to take the houses in question on a new lease with similar repairing covenants and on condition that he received the property in good repair at the commencement, and this view was upheld by the Appeal Justices.

Whilst there is no doubt that in the main such a view is correct, I do not think we should interpret this judgment as meaning that a deterioration in the class of occupier-tenant should never have any effect on a lessee's liability, for it would be manifestly unjust and absurd to expect a lessee to provide in weekly tenements first-class enamel-finish paintwork and expensive wall-papers just because when his lease was granted the houses were occupied by people who required such things. In such circumstances a lessee could now claim the protection of the Landlord and Tenant

Act, 1927, which makes statutory that always-existing fair limit of claim "the damage to the reversion."

On the other hand, a lessee cannot claim any reduction of liability for repairs such as pointing, brickwork, roof repairs and external painting, simply because the class of occupier-tenant who has come to inhabit the premises would not be particular about such matters so long as serious inroads of the elements were avoided. In Calthorpe v. McOscar one gathers that such structurally essential repairs predominated. This perhaps explains why a judgment for the full amount of the lessor's claim was given, which judgment, taken together with the very emphatic summing-up, seems to me to have resulted in an overstatement of the lessor's point of view. Surely deterioration in the class of occupier-tenant must have some effect on the question of dilapidations at the end of a term, but this will be mainly in connection with decorations and style of "finish," and therefore often proportionately small.

The effect of recent legislation on the assessment of dilapidation claims raises one or two interesting points, but the legal aspects of this matter were dealt with very clearly in Mr. Creswell's Paper last session. I should just like to comment briefly, however, on two points. Firstly, it seems now to be generally agreed that "damage to the reversion" means the immediate reversion (except where this has no value, such as a reversion of a day or two only). Secondly, I think many of us are awaiting with great interest the not unlikely case of a lessor who has been paid for dilapidations proceeding to demolish the premises within a short time. Will the lessee who has paid over the money be able to sue for its return? and what will be held to be a reasonable time to elapse before a lessor may safely change his mind or his plans and decide to demolish the premises?

(b) THE WORK ON THE PREMISES.

When acting for a lessor at the expiration of a lease containing full repairing covenants, the duties of the surveyor include, in effect, the making of a complete structural survey. The method of carrying this out which I have found usually best is in the order—(1) roof ; (2) interior, working downwards ; (3) exterior, other than roof ; (4) drains ; and (5) gardens, fences, and the like. Although in the schedule the roof and exterior are naturally placed together, it is best when surveying to go through the interior before examining the exterior, as any signs of the entry of the weather can be noted from inside and special attention given to those places when examining the exterior. In the latter connection let me point out the utility of a pair of field-glasses for scrutinising inaccessible parts of structures.

A few notes on some of the more evasive and difficult matters encountered during survey may be of interest:—

Decay in Timbers.

This includes both “ wet ” and “ dry ” rot, and the effects of harmful insects such as the “ death-watch ” beetle. All roof timbers should be examined, and a reasonable number of them probed (some kind of probe or stiletto, and a good electric torch, should always be carried).

Dry-rot may be more particularly expected in dados, skirtings, door frames, the linings behind folding-shutters, and in next-the-ground floors covered with linoleum. A slight curvature in boarding and linings, across the grain, often indicates attack from the back.

Wet-rot is very common in the tenons of the bottom rails of sash-windows, which should always be “ suspect.”

The death-watch beetle attacks hard woods only, and particularly chestnut and oak. I have not been able to find any recorded case where its activities were mentioned in connection with dilapidations, and it would be interesting to hear the views of members on how far a lessee should be held liable for damage caused by generations of these beetles operating through centuries.

Lead and Zinc Flats and Gutters.

These and similar features require very careful inspection, though it must be kept in mind that, under a covenant to repair, the covering of such flats, especially when of lead, is often capable of careful repair (possibly with the addition of new boarding beneath, and "re-dressing"). Zinc flats are much more difficult to repair satisfactorily, and that material reaches a brittle and "lifeless" condition which makes it unamenable to patching.

The question frequently arises as to whether a lessor has a claim in respect of the replacement by the lessee of original leadwork by zinc. In the case of a terrace of similar houses it is sometimes patent that the original valley-gutters, &c., were of lead, but that zinc has been used to replace certain gutters and parts as repair became necessary. Personally I think such a substitution by a comparatively short-lived material constitutes definite damage to the lessor's reversion, for which he should receive some consideration.

Brickwork and Pointing.

A lessee under full repairing covenants is liable for rebuilding brickwork which is in need of such rebuilding, even to the extent of completely renewing walls and foundations under a "dangerous structure" notice; but he should not be required to rebuild merely slight bulges. Brickwork should therefore be examined, both as to soundness and plumbness, with special attention to arches and piers, and work beneath the bearings of heavily loaded bressummers.

Parapet walls carried up to enclose gutters are frequently found to lean inwards dangerously, owing to the decay of a roof-plate let into the wall on its inner face. Bay windows, too, frequently show serious defects, and small cracks in a main wall at each side of the junction with the top of a bay window may indicate failure or decay of the bressummer which spans the opening on to which the bay is built.

In old houses it is not uncommon to find that what appear outwardly to be bad bulges extend only to the half-brick red facings, the wall being plumb on the inside and mainly sound.

Pointing is often a fiercely debated item between surveyors, some of whom attempt to resist any claim for repointing unless the weather is actually penetrating the walls; whilst others seem to regard it as a beautiful decorative feature which should be renewed as soon as it looks a little worn and past its youthful bloom! The function of pointing is preservative and structural, and if it has become so soft or weakened that its renewal will very shortly be necessary, then, surely, repointing should be claimed for, even though the weather is not penetrating nor the majority of the joints actually " open " when the lease expires. Sometimes one finds that the pointing round door and window frames is defective though the wall-faces are sound.

Recent correspondence in the technical press has called attention to the serious effects that the fumes from coke-burning boilers (now so commonly installed) have upon cement pointing and cement-mortar joints, such as have hitherto been considered desirable for the above-roof courses of chimney-stacks, and even specified by building regulations.

Internal and External Ironwork.

Metal windows should receive close attention, especially in factory or similar premises where rough usage is likely. The frames are sometimes found to have been badly bent, and fasteners and opening gear are more often than not defective.

External iron fire-escape staircases are often found on close inspection to be sadly defective. Only recently I had to deal with such a staircase in the City area, which, from the ground or from a casual inspection, did not look in very bad condition ; on going on to the staircase, however, it turned out to be so badly damaged that in many places one had to walk up on the strings, so cracked and dangerous were the chequer-plates of treads and landings. Serious rusting had taken place at the junctions of stanchions with strings and girders, and most of the stanchions were eaten away at the feet where they entered the concrete (a common defect). Though the rusting referred to is usually due to defective or insufficient painting, the broken chequer-plates are more often than not the result of the escape staircase being used for the trundling down of heavy cases of goods.

Iron gutters and down-pipes are examples of the type of repair which justifies a "covering clause," but the surveyor should, nevertheless, look keenly for any definite evidence of defects. Beware especially those rectangular-section rain-water pipes "buried flush" in chases in the outside faces of the walls. Impossibility of repainting the backs and sides, combined with capillary suction between the pipes and the sides of the chases, lead to complete rusting away, though the painted fronts of the pipes may not indicate it. Often internal dampness or rusty streak-marks externally give a clue to the state of affairs. The surrounding stone, brick or stucco has usually to be badly cut about in order to get these pipes out, as they are frequently "rusted in," and careful making good is thus necessitated.

Floors.

In addition to any defects due to decay in the timber, and to such physical disrepair as worn surfaces, the surveyor should bear in mind (especially in the case of warehouse premises) the possibility of indications that the lessee has seriously overloaded the floors. Such damage may be difficult to prove or to "bring home" to a particular lessee, but heavy claims in respect thereof have been made and sustained successfully. Among the more usual indications of overloading are splitting or turning-over axially of joists and beams, general sagging of the floor, and possibly flexion or iron or steel girders (the latter fault, however, not usually apparent to the eye). I have noticed that the stacking of paper or cardboard in bulk is a frequent cause of overloading of floors, the weight of this material in closely packed bulk not, seemingly, being always realised. In one case within my knowledge a Government Department, who were lessees for a short time of a building used as a temporary store, so crippled the floors by overloading them with piles of official forms that before the premises could be relet a system of steel stanchions and bearers had to be inserted.

Special Fittings or Fixtures.

By this I mean such things as have "antique" or "period" value (such as Adams fireplaces), or are of specially expensive design (such as elaborately worked door furniture, or choice panelling or joinery). The reason for specially careful inspection of such things arises from the fact that expert attention may be necessary to repair some comparatively small defect. One might instance chipped marble-work to mantel-pieces, and broken beadings and inlay to valuable woodwork.

Sanitary Fittings, Water-Supply Apparatus, and Central Heating.

Sanitary fittings merit close inspection as their replacement may be a costly matter, especially if of special or unusual make or design, such as certain types of valve-closet. In connection with the latter kind of apparatus I should imagine that substitution by an efficient and reasonably silent pedestal closet and water-waste preventer would now have to be accepted by a lessor, since no "damage to" "the reversion" would result by thus replacing a broken valve-closet, and a saving would often result.

Such things as cisterns, tanks, boilers and heating apparatus present difficult problems to a surveyor owing to the difficulty of obtaining direct evidence of their real condition, and it appears that a lessor has to take a certain amount of risk at the end of a lease regarding repairs to such apparatus that may be "imminent," but which his surveyor cannot actually demonstrate at the time. In the case of heating installations of any size one should make sure that they have not been emptied down prior to the survey so that leakages shall not be so apparent; and, if practicable, the boiler should be fired and brought to working pressure so that the general condition of the system can be more readily judged.

Drains.

Though covered by the usual type of general repairing covenant, the repair and maintenance of drains is often expressly referred to in the lease, though occasionally, on the contrary, excepted. As one of the first things a new tenant will do is to test the drains before signing the lease, the lessor's surveyor must be careful that his client recovers from the outgoing lessee the full cost of any repairs to the drains for which he can be properly held liable. The only satisfactory methods of ascertaining soundness are by the water-test for underground drains, and smoke under pressure, or the air test, for soil-pipes and their connected fittings.

In addition, the general condition of inspection-covers, and frames, gulleys and gratings, and so on, should be noted, and particularly the state of cement renderings and benchings in the chambers, broken rendering being a most potent source of blockage. Lead soil-pipes are frequently found to be in danger of collapse owing to their dead weight having pulled the lead tacks out of the wall.

It should be noted that where there is a covenant to repair the interior only of the premises, drains within the area bounded by the external walls, such as the main drain under a "terrace" house, have been held to be included in the liability and drains without such area excluded.

In the case of country houses it will often be necessary, of course, to examine the condition of sewage disposal plants. If there is any indication that grease-traps have not been used at the kitchen and scullery sinks, trouble may be anticipated.

Further space cannot be spared on these "things to look for," though some of them may be touched upon again in the section dealing with the valuation of the work.

We now come to the schedule, and with regard to its form I must say that the "specification" form seems to be the most practical, especially where a money settlement can reasonably be anticipated. By specification form I do not, of course, mean that the schedule should amount to a full specification with working details, but simply that it should be drawn up on the "wash, stop and distemper the "ceiling" plan as distinct from "the ceiling is soiled and "stained." The former style is surely more precise, and indicates clearly the work which has been measured and valued where there is a monetary claim. Nevertheless, I always take care to head the document "Schedule of "Repairs required to make good Dilapidations found to "have accrued at . . . in breach of the Repairing "Covenants of a Lease dated . . . , " and so on.

The use of numerous "covering" clauses is to be deprecated, including the rather common practice of embodying in an item a sort of catalogue of the parts of the structure in question in case any of them happen to be out of repair. One sometimes finds, for example, under the heading "Roof," reference to brick-on-edge or stone copings, cement renderings and fillets, flaunchings, chimneypots, and so on, and after climbing to the roof spends valuable time in looking for defects in these features only to find that ten shillings, may be, will "cover the lot." There is, however, more justification for another type of covering clause, already indicated under the remarks above in connection with rain-water pipes and gutters, and hot-water and heating apparatus and boilers. Such matters are often provided for by an "examine and repair as "necessary" clause, and although the lessee's surveyor may occasionally judge it expedient to contend that it is the lessor's duty to do any examining and investigating, usually that argument is two-edged, for the lessor's surveyor may proceed to such thorough examination, discover serious defects, and increase his claim! The agreeing of the figures to be included in respect of such items at nominal sums probably results, on the whole, in a kind of rough-and-ready justice, with a tendency to favour the lessee. If the lessor's surveyor, however, sees or suspects serious disrepair, he should himself carry out detailed examination, even to the extent of getting a specialist's report and estimate in the case of such things as electric or hydraulic lifts, extensive electric-lighting systems, central-heating systems and boilers, and so on.

In dealing with the practical questions involved in measuring and valuing the scheduled repairs, I would like to remark that either a quantity surveyor with a knowledge of the law of landlord and tenant, or a general practitioner with a knowledge of quantites, are equally fitted to assess dilapidation and similar claims for damage to buildings. It is of course desirable that one surveyor should handle the claim throughout, examining documents, preparing the schedule, and assessing the damages. Often it is an advantage if he possesses some general knowledge of property and of the property market, as, for example, when claims for loss of rent arise in connection with dilapidations (and sometimes fire). In the case of extensive or important buildings a critical estimation of current rental value may be necessary. I would, however, strongly recommend all younger members who, like myself, were "brought up" on general practice and valuation, to study orthodox quantities if they anticipate any considerable amount of dilapidation or fire-loss assessing work, and if they are able to get some personal help and practical training from a quantity surveyor or estimator friend so much the better. At the very least they should learn and practise consistency in the following matters:—

- (i.) Taking the work in the various rooms, &c., in the same general order—such as ceiling, walls, sundry repairs, paintwork ;
- (ii.) When measuring such work as painting, to keep the sequence "supers, runs, numbered items" ;
- (iii.) Using the usually accepted unit of measurement to which to apply the price—not, for example, billing painting in square feet, or polishing in square yards.

Observation of (i.) and (ii.) above, will encourage conciseness and expedition, and prove a very real safeguard against omitting to measure any of the work ; adherence to (iii.) will avoid possibly serious errors in pricing and "extending" the items.

There is much to be said for the type of dilapidation note-book having dimension columns on the left, space down the centre, and price and cash columns on the right, the whole book being about half as wide again as the orthodox measuring-book. My own practice is to price out and extend all the items in the book, and then to prepare a marked or priced copy of the schedule, which latter is used in negotiation, the note-book only being referred to if unit prices or details of measurement are queried. In the case of such work as painting, this means, of course, that several items in the book (namely, the super, run, and numbers, for example) have to be bracketed, and one figure only—the cost of the painting in the particular apartment in question—carried to the priced schedule. In the event of the claim having to go before an arbitrator, this priced schedule, supported by the measuring-book, should state clearly, and in an easily followed manner, the case they represent, so far as the practical side (measurement and pricing) is concerned.

Beginners sometimes find the work on larger staircases somewhat confusing to measure. I have found clarity and labour-saving both attained by making a rough sketch-plan of staircases, at each floor level usually, showing the principal dimensions (add about 20 per cent. to horizontal to get raking lengths, as for strings, &c.). Provided sufficient details as to heights, depths of dados, friezes, &c., are noted, one can then get most of the quantities from these rough plans.

There will be space for only one more comment under this section, namely, that "abstracting" (collecting into one total work of a similar trade or kind) is usually neither desirable nor practicable in dilapidation work, chiefly because the condition of work—notably painting—varies so much in different parts of the premises that different treatment, and hence a different price per unit of measurement, is necessary.

(c) "WORKING-UP" THE FIGURES; PRICING; NEGOTIATION.

Having measured the work on the premises, the surveyor will very often hand over his measuring-book to juniors to work up the dimensions. I hope I shall not bore you by so well-worn a theme, but always run through the book yourself, preferably after the prices have been applied and the items "extended." Omissions of extension have a strange knack of escaping checking, and usually fate decrees that the omitted item is one of some size monetarily. Incidentally we see here another advantage in preparing a priced or marked schedule—you will find out at once if there is no figure for any item in the measuring-book.

We must return, however, to the point where the dimensions have been worked up, and prices have to be applied. Once again I will risk reiteration by warning the younger practitioner against employing for repair work—especially where the quantities are comparatively small—prices given in price-books and trade journals, which are based on the assumption that the work to which they refer will be contract-work on new buildings and in large quantities. "Repair" prices may be anything up to as much even as 100 per cent. more (in extreme instances), and will often reach 50 per cent. more. The student should keep his own alphabetically indexed note-book of prices and similar useful data culled from experience, and if he can cultivate acquaintance with a reliable builder's estimator, he will learn much to his advantage. One must remark, however, that the estimators of some of the smaller firms of contractors are very erratic. Such books as Rea's How to Estimate are useful, as they show how measured prices are built up by estimating the materials and labour required, and adding suitable percentages for overhead charges and profit. All sorts of "traps" may, of course, turn up in estimating the cost of work, hence the need for an understanding of general principles emphasised above; but, perhaps, a few notes on some of the more frequently occurring pitfalls may be of interest:—

Ceilings and Cornices.

Panelled or elaborately enriched ceilings and cornices may be worth anything up to twice (cornices even more) the price for plain work, especially if the enrichment has become "clogged" with old distemper or paint through past lack of care. Ceilings of unusual height, such as are common in City bank premises, or over well-staircases, may necessitate the erection of a scaffold—an expensive item.

Wall-papering.

Old and "seasoned" varnished papers almost defy stripping, having to be scrapped and picked off in a manner so laborious that the cost of stripping alone may run up to five times the normal figure. Be careful, too, to note the condition of plaster-work behind paper, for one can usually tell if it is "crumbly" and loose, so that extensive making good will have to follow the stripping.

Carpenter's and Joiner's Work.

The making good of perished parts of joinery, such as the feet of mullions and the sill-members of conservatory windows (favourite haunts of dry-rot), is easily underestimated, the time necessary to cut away and neatly splice in new portions, especially in "un-handy" positions, being deceptive.

Plumber's Work.

Very similar remarks apply here, though perhaps the most common error in valuing such items as leadwork to flats and gutters is one of measurement, i.e., insufficient allowance for laps at rolls, turn-ups under cover-flashings, &c. Do not forget, too, wedging and pointing to flashings of lead or zinc, nor that the labour on stepped flashings is worth twice as much as on plain work.

Paving and Tiling.

A very wide range of cost is found in pavings, ranging from 7s. per yard or thereabouts for "jointless" flooring up to 50s. or even more for marble mosaic. Terazzo would compare at about 20s., and real marble 40s. to 50s. for work in 12-inch squares. Damaged tile-facings to walls, fire-place jambs, &c., may be very costly to repair, especially if old patterns have to be specially matched.

Painter's Work.

Here we find extremes, both in condition ("bare wood" to "slightly soiled") and in style of finish ("cottage" to "West End mansion"). Do not overlook the frequent heavy cost through burning-off being necessary to work "crazed" in sunny positions such as south-facing windows, &c. I find windows, by the way, best dealt with by numbering them and classifying as small, medium, or large, with appropriate prices, but measuring in addition such features as wide linings, shutters, and such like. In the case of casement windows, similarly count and grade the lights. When fixing the prices for external windows remember to note whether they have painted reveals. Do not overlook such items as painted eaves-soffits, down-pipes, railings, &c.

Polishing.

This varies from "clean and revive with polish" (the minimum which should ever be accepted—and note the words "with polish") to strip, re-stain, and re-polish. The latter process, necessary if the surface is badly scored or abraded (even if only "in places"), may cost 1s. per square foot, or more in extreme cases.

"Spot" Items.

Usually the labour factor is the most difficult to gauge in these cases, therefore such points as possible difficulty of access, cartage or hoisting of materials, should be considered. One might instance the replacement of a damaged wrought-iron weather vane on a gable apex.

There is no space for further comments here on prices and pricing, but under the heading "Fire Claims" I shall refer to the "collected item."

The final step, negotiation, brings into play certain human factors inherent indeed in the whole subject of "dilapidations" and accountable for much of its interest. In many cases it will be advisable to agree upon an arbitrator, and this should be done at the commencement of operations.

Instructions from a client to treat a lessee with special consideration are best interpreted by making concessions during the negotiation stage, as the omission of reasonably "claimable" items may create awkward comparisons and analogies which will tend to disagreement or to your "giving away" too much. On the contrary, do not inflate a claim with the idea of creating a magnanimous effect by subsequent reductions; it is a transparent expedient, and not likely to impress favourably any arbitrator or tribunal before whom the case may eventually arrive.

Lastly, do not give a receipt in full settlement of all liabilities under the lease if the lessee still owes rent. And if you are acting for a lessee, and all liabilities have been properly agreed and settled, see that a receipt is given which clearly says so.

FIRE CLAIMS.

The estimation of the cost of making good fire damage to buildings differs only from the processes outlined above in that it frequently involves a higher proportion of structural work, and (where the surveyor is acting for the insurance company) usually resolves itself into a rapid but sufficiently accurate checking of a builder's estimate submitted by the insured. As in the case of dilapidations, so in the case of fire claims, correct and fair assessment is impossible without some knowledge of the law on the subject. though I can only give the briefest summary of such leading principles as are most likely to concern the assessment of fire claims (for damage to buildings).

Just as careful study of the lease is essential in dilapidation work, so is examination of the policy in connection with insurance claims, and that document should be perused at the earliest possible moment after a claim has arisen. Never assume that the usual clauses, stipulations, &c., apply simply because the policy is on a standard form or of a standardised type, but look carefully for any special modifications, extensions, or endorsements which may have been made. Note, too, whether the policy covers other risks than fire, as if, for example, burglary also is covered and the fire has made burglarious entry of the premises more easy, steps must be taken to provide reasonable security without delay. The assessor will often find it advisable to look after this, though the assured is primarily responsible. Enquiry must also be made as to whether there is any other policy covering the premises against the same risk ; if so, there may be questions of " contribution " and the apportionment of the loss must be arranged.

The foremost legal principle to be kept in mind is that a fire insurance policy is a contract of indemnity ; hence the compensation payable is limited to the actual loss suffered and to the insured's interest in the property at the time of the fire. The first-mentioned limitation would make it impossible for anyone who had insured a building for, say, £5,000 to recover that sum on a " total loss " occurring if it could be shown that satisfactory reinstatement could be carried out for, say, £4,000 only. The limitation to the assured's interest will effect, among other matters, questions likely to arise between mortgagor and mortgagee. Note, too, that he must have an insurable interest in the property.

A policy is also a personal contract and does not " pass " with the property, but most policies contain an undertaking to pay to a purchaser, upon completion, compensation in respect of a fire which has occurred since the vendor (i.e., the insured) contracted to sell.

The term " fire " implies actual ignition, fortuitous or accidental, and occurring outside its proper and ordinary limits (such as a furnace or grate). Contrary to the old adage, smoke can exist without fire, as simple chemical experiments can prove, and if it does, then there is no " fire," even though damage caused by smoke resulting from fire is covered under a fire policy. Spontaneous combustion is not ordinarily covered. Here it should be stated that it is one of the assessor's duties to investigate the question of "cause"; any doubts he may have as to the genuineness of the occurrence should at once be reported to the insurers. Apart, too, from the question of fraud, breaches of warranties or conditions may have been committed, such as the carrying on (even if only for a few hours) of a hazardous trade excluded by the policy. Every surveyor should mark the advisability of notifying insurance companies when builder's work is going to be carried out in insured premises. Risks from workmen's cigarette-ends, blow-lamps, burning shavings, &c., in kerbless grates, are common. In the City of London the authorities can order an enquiry to be held into the cause of any fire, such inquiry being known as a fire "inquest," though no loss of life may have been involved.

It should be noted that damage can be caused by a fire not on the insured's premises but upon neighbouring premises. Examples are scorching, water-damage caused in extinguishing, and damage caused by falling structures, such "proximate" damage being paid for by the company who insures the building which suffers such damage.

Outside London and other areas where a rate-supported fire-brigade provide a free service, accounts in respect of extinguishing expenses are sometimes sent in to the insured. They do not, however, form a part of his claim, and should be dealt with by the insurance company, who usually pay these charges direct and ex gratia. Unless specially insured, architect's fees, assured's assessor's fees, consequential losses (trade profits and so on), electric appliances which themselves originate a fire, and "sentimental value" (the extra or "antique" value which attaches to such items as Adams mantel-pieces, and such like), may be mentioned among the more usually encountered things which are not ordinarily covered by a normal fire policy. Most policies now allow for rent during the period for which the premises are unusable (up to a limit, usually one year), and it may be in the company's interest to allow the assured the cost of erecting temporary screens or partitions in order to render part of the premises still usable.

Ex gratia payments in respect of items for which no strictly legal liability exists are occasionally made to assured of good standing and unimpeachable "moral hazard." This should always be done with the company's authority naturally, and may be regarded as a kind of advertisement, cementing good relations with the assured. The assessor, though he is there to safeguard the company's interests, must always endeavour to leave the assured with a feeling of reasonable satisfaction.

In the event of disagreement, most policies will be found to contain an arbitration clause, and on questions of cost informal reference to an expert is all that is necessary. Legal points require formal reference under the Arbitration Act, 1889.

The incidence of fire insurance and the law of landlord and tenant is well known to most of you, and I will only remark here that another result of the "contract of indemnity" principle is seen where a fire occurs in a building insured by the lessor, but with full responsibility for repair (without exception in case of fire) on the lessee, for the lessor could not both make the lessee repair and keep the insurance money against the company.

Coming now to the practical questions involved in assessing fire damage, a convenient and expeditious method is "rough quantities," though, of course, in the case of very large fires where entire rebuilding is necessary, the services of architect and quantity surveyor may be essential. In the majority of cases, however, the main structure or carcase of the building is only partially damaged, the principal loss being in connection with joinery, floors, partitions, roofing, fittings, and decorations. Such matters give frequent opportunity for that time-saving device the "collected item," especially when measuring and pricing floors, partitions, and roofs.

For example, suppose there are large areas of wooden upper floors destroyed or severely damaged, work out the cost of a fair-sized area of such flooring complete, including joists, boarding, strutting (if any), and the plaster or other ceilings beneath; reduce your figure to some handy unit of measurement, such as the "square," and apply it to the total area of similar flooring damaged. A similar method can be applied to partitions, namely, studding plus lath and plaster both sides (or brick or slab plus plaster) ; to lead, zinc or asphalt flat roofs, or even to ridge roofs, provided trusses, and so on, are taken in addition. Remember, however, that one must always "take" in addition such features as binders and trimmers in floors, ridging and guttering to roofs, and other items not covered by your price for the "collected" unit, or which cannot be allowed for in that calculation because they do not bear any direct proportion to the area of flooring, roofing (or whatever it may be) concerned.

Among work the cost of which it is easy to underestimate where small quantities are concerned, one could mention brickwork and steelwork pre-eminently. Small quantities of brickwork are best dealt with at per foot cube, or for 9-inch work or less per foot super ; and do not forget the cost of toothing and bonding to old work. Steelwork in small quantities cannot be satisfactorily estimated by weight, and it is as well to make out your own schedule for leading sizes of r.s.j., &c., at per foot run fixed (including reasonable cartage and hoisting costs). Steel roof trusses can be priced "each," hoisted, fixed, and painted complete. The above is just a brief indication of some time-saving methods, and their further application will be readily realised.

One warning is advisable in connection with the estimating of damage to the electric-light system in a building where a fire has occurred. Such damage may be much more extensive than appears from inspection, firstly, because it may be necessary to "wire back" some distance from the area of actual damage in order to avoid junctions in the cables (which would not be allowable in good-class work), and, secondly, because water often gets into the tubing or casing and would lead to perishing and probable fusion in the near future if the wiring were not renewed.

In connection with shoring up—a precaution often advisable to avoid possible further damage—there seems a tendency for builders to charge for the timbers as for material used, instead of charging, as they should do in most cases, merely for "use and waste."

Finally, one must include in all fire-claim estimates—or allow, when acting for the insurers, as the case may be—all such "preliminary" items as district surveyor's fees, water and light for use on works, hoardings and tarpaulins for temporary protection, cartages, workmen's insurances, and all other usual and similar charges, plus a reasonably generous "spot" sum to cover the very many small items of sundry repairs and reinstatements which cannot readily be measured (probably not even ascertained) in the mess and muddle which follow a fire.

CLAIMS FOR WEATHER AND FOR WATER-APPARATUS DAMAGE TO BUILDINGS UNDER INSURANCE POLICIES.

The popular form of insurance policy known as "comprehensive" has recently been extended in scope so that the type of policy which includes buildings (usually known as "house-owner's comprehensive") includes, in addition to the usual risks such as fire, explosion, &c., damage caused by storm or tempest, and by the bursting or overflowing of water-tanks, apparatus or pipes. The "contents" form of policy (known as "householder's comprehensive") has also been extended to cover damage to landlord's fixtures and fittings for which the assured is legally responsible, so that it will be seen that claims for damage to such things as boilers and central-heating apparatus may arise out of a "contents" policy, and in this connection the surveyor's knowledge of what ordinarily constitutes a "landlord's fixture" may be useful.

With regard to "storm and tempest," the Oxford Dictionary mentions a combination of meteorological conditions as constituting the former, and, regarding the latter, prescribes certain definite wind velocities. It may often be necessary to refer to official weather records to confirm that at the time and place in question the conditions did in fact comply with accepted definitions of "storm" or "tempest." For example, if a parapet gutter becomes choked, overflows and causes damage to plaster-work and decorations in the rooms below, such damage would appear to be claimable if it were caused during an undoubted "storm," even though the prime cause was lack of care in keeping the gutter and its outlet periodically cleared of silt and rubbish. If the final choking-up and overflowing had occurred during mere rainfall, as distinct from definite "storm," the policy clause would not have covered the damage. Similarly, in the winter, snow and frost may bring down a weak cornice—(judging by what I have seen, many stucco cornices on West End houses are in a defective condition)—and if this occurs during a "storm" the damage would appear to be claimable.

With regard to bursting, &c., of water-apparatus, many claims made in connection with boilers and tanks appear to arise from these articles having worn through from old age, examination showing no signs of "bursting." It will be seen that in handling such claims—and claims under the storm and tempest clause—considerable judgment is called for. Usually the first £5 of all such claims is excluded, and this is some safeguard against frivolous or trifling claims; but there is no doubt that by these extensions of cover the insurance companies are taking risks which arise largely out of people's carelessness.

The actual assessment of the type of claim referred to above calls for no special comment, though in connection with severe water damage—such as arises from overflowing cisterns and burst pipes—the cost of special heating to assist "drying-out" should be allowed. I have noticed that plaster-work of the "sirapite" type is particularly affected by soakage, tending to come away from its backing very readily if the latter is other than lath or mesh.

I hope these few notes have been of some interest, and if they have included much that is familiar, I can only plead that this is one of the risks of writing from experience rather than from theory. Finally, I should like to express my obligation to my principal (Mr. J. W. Tyler), with and through whom I have obtained the most valuable part of my professional experience.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. DUDLEY B. KING'S Paper entitled

THE ASSESSMENT OF DILAPIDATION AND SIMILAR CLAIMS : Some Practical Notes.

The PRESIDENT said the members would be sorry to learn that Mr. King, who was to have presented his Paper that evening, passed away very suddenly the previous week after a short illness, pneumonia following upon influenza. Almost up to the last he was engaged in finishing off his Paper, and only a day or two before he died he called to see the Secretary to inquire if there were any amendments which should be made in it. He left a wife and two children, and it was the desire of his relatives that his Paper should be taken as read, and that his death should not in any way interfere with the transactions of The Institution, but that a discussion should take place.

It was hoped that it would be a peculiar satisfaction to Mr. King's relatives to read the remarks, which would, no doubt, be made in the course of the discussion, as to the extraordinarily careful and interesting nature of the Paper, and that his relatives would treasure those remarks as some indication of what his fellow-members of The Institution thought of him.

He would ask the members to stand for a few moments in token of respect for Mr. King's memory.

(The members stood in silence.)

Mr. J. W. TYLER (Chartered Surveyor) said that although the meeting was clouded by sadness, yet personally he felt that there was something of sunshine and, perhaps, of gladness associated with the proceedings. Mr. King had been cut off in the prime of life at the age of 38, leaving a wife and two young boys, but he felt certain that they would be able to turn to the " Journal " and read the Paper which their husband and father wrote, and regard it as in some sense a memorial of his life's work, comparatively short though it was.

Mr. King had asked whether it was appropriate that he should contribute a Paper to The Institution which would be discussed by members of much greater experience than his. He told Mr. King to go ahead, and he said to him "You have a good precedent; you are comparatively young; but Papers have been read before this Institution by young men before, and on the same subject of dilapidations."

Mr. King had then said "I feel that what I am going to try to do will be mainly for the benefit of the younger members; it cannot possibly have any pretence to appeal to the older members, with their large experience, but it may set the younger members thinking and give some of them useful help." On Mr. King's behalf he ventured to express the hope that the Paper would be of help to the younger members of The Institution.

Before going further he would like to say that Mr. King would have wished that a full and free discussion of his Paper should take place, notwithstanding the sad circumstances under which it was being considered.

Mr. King divided his Paper into three parts and dealt in the first place with documents.

On the question of documents there was very little which he wished to say. The question had been very well dealt with in earlier Papers by Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Graham Mould. It was as well to bear in mind, however, that leases were not the only documents with which surveyors had to deal. They had on occasion to act on such things as judgments of the Court. Some few years ago he was appointed to settle a question which came before the Court of Chancery and dealt with the apportionment of the cost of repairs as between capital and income. It might, perhaps, be of interest to indicate what the order of the Court was. The case was an action brought by a trustee against a widow and remaindermen who were charities.

He (the speaker) was nominated by the Court to deal with the question at issue, and was instructed to go through a specification of repairs already prepared, and, secondly, through a bill of costs of repairs effected since the death of the testator and not included in those specifications, and, thirdly, that he was to prepare a specification of further repairs that were necessary to comply with the terms of leases in the case of leaseholds or to place freeholds and copyholds in good tenantable repair. The estate consisted of a good deal of freehold, leasehold and copyhold property in London and other places, and involved an amount of some thousands of pounds.

That showed what a surveyor might be called upon to do with nothing but the plain directions of the Court, which brought into operation his own common-sense to guide him.

The question of fair wear and tear had always been a bugbear. Not very long ago he was brought up against it in the following way. On an agricultural estate of considerable size there had been four or five changes of farm tenancies ; it was the custom on that estate that, when a counterclaim for repairs was settled, the amount should be handed over to the landlord or his agent to spend on the property and do the repairs. On the changes which had taken place in the tenancy referred to, he had found that, when those counterclaims had come to be met, the tenant-right valuers on both sides declined to recognise the fact that there was no fair wear and tear clause in the tenancy agreements. He pointed out that the agreements did not contain any fair wear and tear clause ; but both the valuers declined to have anything to do with it, and said it was the custom and that they could not depart from it. That was assuming a power for which there was no authority. Of course what one decided to do as a matter of policy in practically all cases of that sort was to say " If it is shown " to my satisfaction that the outgoing tenant, when he " entered, entered under similar conditions, I will, without " admitting anything at all, allow it to be settled in that " way," but it was not at all satisfactory.

The question of damage to the reversion, as a measure of the damage suffered, had been touched upon. It had always been the custom to consider the question of the damage to the reversion. The Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, seemed to make rather a song about it, but it had always been an accepted principle of law as far as he was aware.

A rather interesting point had arisen only that morning in his own practice. A client of his was the tenant of certain premises, and the landlord had covenanted to keep the premises wind and watertight. Dampness was rising in the walls—the party-wall and certain external walls—which was seriously inconveniencing her, and she asked if she had any right to call on the landlord under that guarantee to remedy that or to allow her to cancel her tenancy. Personally he thought it was a pretty problem. He had said he must consider the point, but he would very much like to know the views of any member present.

With regard to work on the premises, and the method of assessing damages, Mr. King had been a most methodical person who had a set and proper way of going about those things, as he thought all would agree the Paper showed. The Paper, he felt, should be regarded as a description of the surveyor's method in going about his business rather than as an elucidation of theories or principles of assessment. Mr. King wanted to bring out the actual work the surveyor did on the premises.

There was a point which arose, in connection with that section of the Paper, on the question of drains. One was accustomed to find in schedules of dilapidations a clause about opening up, inspecting and testing, &c. He had always said he thought it was the business of the lessor's surveyor to do that, and that the lessee's surveyor should not be asked to commit himself in that way. He did not know what was the real justification for that clause, and had never paid much attention to it. He had always said "Get on with it and let me know what is the matter, but" "do not ask me to tell you, because I say there is nothing

“ the matter.” He thought that if there was any justification for such a provision, the lease should say that the lessee should, at the end of his tenancy, open up and test the drains and show that they were watertight or gastight, or whatever it might be, but one did not find that. The surveyor was always left to deal with that kind of problem himself.

On the subject of pricing he thought that it was a most important thing for professional surveyors to be able confidently to price the work which they thought ought to be done in settling claims for dilapidations, and he would like to say, for the benefit of Mr. King's memory, that he had always found him most efficient in valuing building work ; he was very careful to study current labour and material prices and made that a very strong point. It was most important for the young surveyor to have chapter and verse for his prices. That point was apt to be overlooked and slurred over, but it was essential to produce justification for the prices given when brought up against an opponent. It was very useful, for example, in checking estate management accounts when questions of repairs and the cost of repairs were constantly under review. He could not impress on the younger members of The Institution too strongly the importance of keeping closely in touch with prices day by day.

In the final sentence of his Paper Mr. King made a personal reference to him, and he would like to conclude by saying that Mr. King was, in his opinion, an unassuming, unostentatious and conscientious surveyor, whose loss he felt very deeply. He commended the Paper to the members.

Mr. R. B. MANN (Chartered Surveyor) said that he was doubtful whether dilapidations or the pricing of them was put into the hands of builders for settlement, in the way the author seemed to infer, to a greater extent than formerly. At one time there were far more solicitors who knew a little builder round the corner who could price and value dilapidations than was the case now. It was, of course, absolutely necessary for a proper valuation of dilapidations to be made by a qualified and experienced surveyor. It was sometimes not only a question of the price for so many yards of distempering and for so many pieces of paper on the walls. "Damage" could not be assessed by any builder, or, indeed, by anyone who did not possess thorough knowledge and experience.

With reference to the difficulty of considering the condition of premises at the commencement of the term when the termination of the lease was reached, it was, of course, most important to have a schedule of the condition of premises attached to the lease when the lessee took possession. He always tried to get that, though he was not always successful. A well-advised solicitor would tell his client that before he took a lease of the premises they must be surveyed by a surveyor with regard to both structural and sanitary condition. That was the time when the surveyor should report a schedule of the condition ought to be attached to the new lease before the prospective lessee signed it.

He thought that solicitors were getting more and more inclined to rely on surveyors' reports in those respects. He did not know whether any other member had suffered from the trouble he had experienced, namely, of being instructed to make a survey of dilapidations on the instructions that the covenants of the lease were "of the usual kind." His experience was that there was no usual kind of covenants in any lease. There was always some difference, and it was most important, as the author of the Paper said, to read the whole lease if it was possible to get hold of it.

With regard to decisions of the Courts, which were very valuable, it was necessary to consider all the circumstances of the cases and those of the case one was dealing with. It was tempting to take a summing up or a judgment and to act on that, thinking that it was entirely on the same lines as one's own case. It might not do so, however, because the circumstances were different. It was safer to regard the judgment as a sort of guide in the circumstances of one's own case.

He very much doubted if the lessee who had paid and settled a claim for dilapidations could successfully sue for the return of his money under any circumstances. He referred them to page 103 of the "Journal," where the author said: "I think many of us are awaiting with great interest the not unlikely case of a lessor who has been paid for dilapidations proceeding to demolish the premises within a short time. Will the lessee who has paid over the money be able to sue for its return?" He doubted that very much.

He would like to warn the younger members against going about making surveys with field-glasses to see, for example, the condition of the pointing on a roof, and so on, because he thought the use of field-glasses often led a lively imagination to a wrong conclusion. One might think, for example, that something was missing and the pointing was out from the joints of the ridge, and, using glasses, one might notice that it was very dark. There might, however, be black mortar there. It was necessary to look and see for oneself.

With regard to dry-rot, if a lessee covered his basement-boarded floor with linoleum and stopped up the air-gratings by planting flower beds outside, which completely covered them, and dry-rot set in, there could be no question about his liability.

The author said: "The question frequently arises as to whether a lessor has a claim in respect of the replacement by the lessee of original leadwork by zinc." That was one of the examples of "damage." A builder would say "Strip all the zinc and replace with 6-lb. lead," but it was a question rather of "damage," and the author said: "Personally I think such a substitution by a comparatively short-lived material constitutes definite damage to the lessor's reversion, for which he should receive some consideration." The author did not there in his Paper say that the lessor should receive payment in money for stripping zinc and replacing it with lead, and that was where experience and knowledge of the special subject came in.

Under "Special Fittings or Fixtures" the author said: "One might instance chipped marble-work to mantel-pieces, and broken beadings and inlay to valuable wood-work," and he also said: "The reason for specially careful inspection of such things arises from the fact that expert attention may be necessary to repair some comparatively small defect." There again it seemed to him the question was one of allowance for "damage." If it were only a question of a slight chip, one would not say "Take down the whole marble mantel-piece and replace it by a new one." The question was one of degree and of using common-sense.

Personally he did not think that a pedestal closet was necessarily a proper substitute for a valve apparatus, because sometimes valve w.c.'s were of more importance to one's client than a pedestal.

With regard to drains, he was of Mr. Tyler's opinion; he really had not come across a repair covenant which required him—or, at any rate, he had not read it in such a way as to require him—to open up drains and test them at the end of a lease, nor did he test them if he was acting for the lessor. Whether he ought to do so he would probably be told later on, but all he did was to satisfy himself that the drains were in working order and that the inspection chambers, gulleys and other things were in good repair. If they were not, he claimed to have them put so.

While he was on the subject of drains, it might be of interest to some members to know that Stroud's Judicial Dictionary gave the meaning of "wydraught" as "a water-passage, gutter or watering place." He had never yet met a surveyor or solicitor who knew the meaning of the word "wydraught"; they thought it had something to do with drains, but really it was concerned with water.

With regard to headings to schedules, everyone had different ideas. It was very important to assess dilapidations on a measure and value basis, as against an assumption that experience or guessing would enable anyone, however experienced or however good a guesser, to succeed against hard facts. Over and over again in meeting other surveyors he had found the great advantage of being able to say "There are so many yards at so much a yard." Another man might say "My great experience enables me to look into that room and assess the dilapidations at £25." That was all very well until one got into the witness-box, and then measurement told every time against such evidence. It was even necessary to have the figures for each room separately, so that one could compare differences with the opposing surveyor.

Authors of Papers on professional subjects were sometimes inclined to assume a knowledge on the part of their readers to a degree which reduced the helpfulness of their Papers to less experienced brethren. The fact that Mr. King did not neglect to deal with points which some might consider elementary made his practical notes the more valuable and helpful.

Mr. A. H. DAVIS (Chartered Surveyor) said it was with diffidence and feelings of respect to the memory of the writer of the very interesting and able Paper under discussion that he rose to make a few comments thereon.

It was obvious, from the description by the author of his methods of setting to work in dealing with dilapidation claims, that he was thoroughly qualified by practice and experience to do so, and he would suggest to all Junior Members that they should study the Paper carefully.

Mr. Tyler had mentioned—and personally he would like to emphasise it—the great importance of thoroughly understanding the meaning of repairing covenants and being able to dissect them and split them up into their component parts. One little example would emphasise his remarks. A year or so ago he was acting as arbitrator in a dilapidation claim in respect of a good-class house in one of the inner suburbs. A chartered surveyor was acting for the lessor and a chartered architect for the lessee. There was a general covenant in the lease to support, uphold, maintain and keep in good and substantial repair. The architect brought along his client. The lease had been running about fifteen years, and his object in bringing his client was to be able to prove the condition of the property before the client went into occupation. He (the speaker) said to him "Have you read the covenant?" and the architect assured him that he had. He then pointed out that the covenant said "to keep," and that it was established law that, in order to be able to keep property in repair, one had first to put it in repair, and he referred him to the well-known case of Conquest v. Ebbetts [1896], A.C., 490.

He would also like to refer to Mr. Tyler's remarks on "wind and watertight." He rather gathered that the damp was creeping up into the house probably because of lack of a damp-course, and therefore was an inherent defect in the house before the lady went in. "Wind and water-tight" in his view would mean wind and watertight with regard to elements such as the roof or to beating through the walls of rain or snow or sleet.

With regard to Mr. Tyler's remarks on drains, he thought it was quite unnecessary to put in a lease that the lessee had to open up drains because they happened to be hidden. One might as well call on him to open up other parts of the structure which were also hidden. Personally he thought the proper procedure was a testing of the drains on behalf of the lessor by the lessor's surveyor. In some instances that was not possible, as when there were no inspection-chambers of any kind, and then a chemical or olfactory test would have to be made.

The position of the words "fair wear and tear" in a repairing covenant was important in determining whether they applied to the three parts of the general covenant to repair or only to the "deliver up" clause. He need not mention, perhaps, that every general covenant was usually of three parts. There was the part to keep and put, the part to maintain and uphold during the term, and the part to deliver up at the end, and if those words appeared in the "deliver up" clause only, the lessee could not claim the benefit of those words for the "keep" and "maintain" clauses.

With reference to Calthorpe v. McOscar, it should be remembered that the Court of Appeal in 1923 decided, in effect, that Proudfoot v. Hart [1890], 25 Q.B.D., 42 C.A., did not lay down any rule of general application which could be applied equally to a three years' agreement and to a ninety-five years' lease. "How," said the Court, "can the extent of a lessee's obligation to repair be measured by the class of tenant which happens to be occupying premises at the termination of a 95 years' lease?" The Court also referred to Morgan v. Hardy [1886], 18 Q.B.D., 646, in which the above principle had already been decided in the Divisional Court.

As the author suggested, there was no doubt that, had Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1925, been in operation, the decision in the McOscar case would have been different; but that section cut, so to speak, both ways. One could conceive circumstances where a property, owing to changes in the neighbourhood, had so increased in value as to call for a much higher standard of repair at the end of a lease than would have been necessary at the commencement of the term.

As to the author's query as to how soon a lessor could demolish premises for which he had received payment for dilapidations, personally he thought a minimum period would be twelve months. For instance, to pursue the matter from another angle, in all cases where a tenant had to be compensated if the landlord did not utilise his premises within a certain period laid down by the arbitrator, the tenant was entitled to receive a money award. In the instance in question he thought also that, if a landlord deliberately misled a lessee with regard to the demolishing of the premises or the altering of them in such a way that the repairs and decorations of the tenant would have no effect, then, if he went against his word within twelve months, he could be quite properly shot at, though personally he was not aware of any case which had yet been fought on the point. The members were, of course, aware that the decision in Inderwick v. Leech [1884], 1 T.L.R., 95, had gone by the board, in view of Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1925. That was a case where the landlord was pulling down his property but claimed in full and received dilapidations from the lessee.

There could be no doubt that the substitution in repairs of an inferior material, such as zinc for lead, would, particularly if made at the end of a lease, be a damage for which a lessor could claim some monetary compensation, and as to repairs, Lord Justice Banks in Lurcott v. Wakeley and Wheeler [1911], 1 K.B., 923, defined "repair" as "the restoration by renewal or replacement of subsidiary parts of a whole."

In dealing with the frequently vexed question, as the Paper stated, as to when a lessor could claim repointing of the brickwork, an interesting case to remember was Eyers v. Williams (1922), which had to do with a claim for forfeiture made under a notice serving an ad interim schedule. The Court held, both as to bulged brickwork and as to pointing, that "danger was always the test of the situation." A frequent cause of bulged front and back walls in very old buildings was the lack of bonding between those and the party-walls.

The author's remarks on the danger of lack of attention to the painting of fire-escape stairs was only too true. The public authority which required the installation of those should in some measure exercise periodical supervision and be able to enforce penalties for neglect. He knew of an hotel where the flanges of the supporting steel beams had partially rusted through lack of paint.

It should be made compulsory for a tablet to be placed in a conspicuous position on the walls of factories and warehouses stating the maximum loading capacity per square foot which the floor had been constructed to take. The trouble referred to in the Paper would then be avoided.

As to the replacement of a valve-closet by one of a "wash-down" pattern, there was no doubt as to the author's contention being correct. The statement could be exemplified by reference to the case of Benabo v. Fox, reported in the Estates Gazette for 20th April, 1929, page 540, where the lessor claimed in an ad interim schedule for graining and varnishing in addition to painting. Mr. Justice MacKinnon decided against him on the ground that "the fashion had changed."

As to the form of schedule, there were, as the author showed, two schools of thought. One held that the schedule should merely state the defect as it was, whilst the other held that it should set out the works required in the form of a specification. Personally he thought that the latter was the only fair method.

Lessees were frequently people of small financial means, and to comply with the requirements of a schedule might entail considerable financial strain upon them. He felt, therefore, that lessors' surveyors should do all they could to enable the lessees to obtain reliable builders' estimates of the costs of the works. On that point he thought that the House of Lords' decision in Fox v. Jolly (1916), 1 A.C., 1, was wrong from the moral standpoint.

The author's remarks on other matters were so complete as to give little room for discussion or remark, but there was one point in regard to fire claims which must be mentioned, namely, the improper claims which were so frequently put forward by the insured. Many seemed to forget that an insurance policy was not intended to be a source of profit in the event of a fire, but merely an indemnity against the actual loss sustained.

In regard to comprehensive or householders' policies, they could be very deceptive as to terms, and the insured should be quite certain that he was covered for damage to both structure and/or decorations in connection with weather and water-apparatus damage.

Mr. G. TURVILLE BROWN (Vice-President) said that the Paper was one of the most thoughtful that he had read on the subject of dilapidations.

What he liked best about it was on the last page, where Mr. King said that the Paper came not from books but from his experience. Personally he was most conscious of that when he read the Paper for the second time.

Dilapidations was of much more importance in practice in the south of England than anywhere else because of the leasehold system. In the south of England the great bulk of property development during the time he had been in business, from 1888 onwards, and, indeed, from the early part of the nineteenth century, had been on the leasehold system. In the hearts of towns the usual length of the term had been, he thought, 80 years, and in outside districts 99 years. In the north of England, however, that was not the case ; one could not get the canny Yorkshire man or Lancashire man to take a 99 years' lease ; they wanted 999 years or perpetual rents, which they called chief rents, or they would deal on a freehold basis. In the north leaseholds for 99 years or shorter periods were rare. The subject of dilapidations was therefore more important to people in the south, particularly in London, than anywhere else.

Forty-five years ago the only question to be considered on the falling in of a building lease was to construe the terms of the instrument which was created between the parties at the commencement of the lease. About 1890 other considerations were imported, and the case of Proudfoot v. Hart set up that one must go outside the written word of the covenant between the two people who had made the original bargain and take in something else. The particular consideration in Proudfoot v. Hart was that it was not fair to allow the lessor compensation which would be in excess of the cost of carrying out the wishes of reasonably minded tenants of the kind who would be likely to occupy the premises. That gave rise to trouble and difficulties between surveyors for a number of years, indeed, until the case of Calthorpe v. McOscar was tried in 1924.

In that case he had been appointed arbitrator originally, but in the end his brother, Arthur Brown, took the case. It was desired by the parties that the award should be made in the form of a special case. The lessor's contention was that the only consideration which ought to be taken into account was the construction of the actual written word of the lease, whereas the lessee said that that was not the case. The property was just off the Gray's Inn Road and had been good property but had come down to being occupied in single floors or rooms by quite poor tenants, and the lessee held that the property having come down to very poor occupation, one ought only to allow, on the strength of Proudfoot v. Hart, what those tenants would ask for, and it was claimed that they came in only by the week or the month and would not ask for anything very much.

His brother made his award in the form of a special case, awarding something a little less than the lessor's surveyor claimed if the lessor's contention was right, and something very much smaller indeed if the lessee's contention was right.

The case came before the Court, and Mr. Justice McCardie found in favour of the figures on the Proudfoot v. Hart basis, and that the lesser sum was the right amount to find. It then came before the Court of Appeal in, he thought, October, 1923, and, after hearing Counsel, the Court of Appeal decided that the right thing to do was to ask the surveyor for a report, and that report his brother duly provided. He was proud to think that the judgment of the Court of Appeal was practically in the terms of the report rendered by the surveyor. The surveyor, of course, did not say that he found for either one basis or the other, but he explained the basis upon which the two amounts were arrived at, and all three judges in the Court of Appeal said that the basis on which the larger amount asked for—not exactly that amount, but something approaching it—was claimed was right and they found accordingly. In other words, they found in favour of the lessor's contention. They were very complimentary, and he thought it was a great thing that the misconception, as Lord Justice Bankes put it, which had been set up in the case of Proudfoot v. Hart, was done away with, and the matter put back very much as it was before Proudfoot v. Hart occurred. That particular case was of such interest that he thought he would be excused for speaking about it at some length.

The cardinal point, when considering dilapidations, was to make the instrument one was construing the important consideration. It was desirable to make the covenants in the lease one was construing the heads of a specification on which one made out what was required of the lessee in order to comply with his covenants. If that were done, he did not think it would be possible to go far wrong.

In conclusion he would like again to refer to Mr. King and to say how sorry he was he never knew him, and how deeply he regretted that Mr. King could not be present that night. He hoped something would be done to commemorate his memory among his fellow-members.

Mr. H. G. BROWNE (Chartered Surveyor) said that on the question of the form of the lease and covenants he agreed with Mr. Mann on the necessity for a schedule, not only of condition, but also of fixtures. He had just had an interesting point arising on that of a large West-End flat with inside mahogany casements. It was obvious that at one time those casements had all had espagnolette bolts, but that these had been removed and cockspur fasteners of good quality fixed. The lessor's surveyor said that the espagnolette bolts should be replaced, but he (the lessee's surveyor) said "Prove to me that they were removed after the lease commenced." The claim amounted to over £100 for the wretched things, and it hampered a settlement to some extent. A schedule of fixtures would have settled the question whether the bolts had been there or not at the beginning of the lease.

A question of importance was that of the proper interpretation of the words "previously painted." They sounded simple enough, but they sometimes led to argument. In a case where the lessee was under full-repairing covenants and had to paint all work previously painted; he had in fact during the lease painted his ceilings—it was the same high-class West-End flat—in elaborate Italian style and had picked out his cornices and enrichments, and so on, and there was a great argument about that. The question was whether "previously painted" meant before the date of the lease or before the end of the lease. Arguing for the lessee, he said it meant before the date of the lease, but what made the particular point in the case to which he was referring more interesting was the fact that the lease went on to say specifically that the lessee should "scrape and whiten all ceilings." He accordingly said to the lessor's surveyor "If you like we will clean the painted ceilings, or, if you do not take that, we will scrape and whiten all ceilings," and he thought he was right in contending that the specific covenant over-rode the general covenant.

He was rather interested in the author's reference to external iron staircases, because he had a case in Bath of such a staircase which to a casual glance looked thoroughly sound and stable, but, when one came to examine it closely, one found the iron bearers in all cases were rusted through in the wall, and the whole thing was on the verge of collapse.

He agreed with Mr. Mann in thinking that it was no part of the duty of the lessee to investigate and find defects. It was definitely the duty of the lessor's surveyor to test drains. It was not often done, and there was a reason for it. Surveyors put their clients' interests before their own, but, if one took the case of a large country house, where testing might take two or three days, it had to be borne in mind that the surveyor was paid for his work on dilapidations by a percentage on the amount of settlement. The lessor's surveyor might spend three days or more testing the drains, and then find they were perfectly sound, in which case he benefited neither his client nor himself. A propos of that he thought that there was something wrong in the way in which services in regard to dilapidations were remunerated on both sides. The lessee's surveyor was paid five guineas per cent. on the settlement ; the result being that the better the result he got for his client, the lower his fee. He would suggest to the Council that that was a matter for consideration.

He was glad that the author emphasised the desirability of a surveyor preparing his own estimates of costs in those cases. Personally he would never forget being in Court once when one of the principal surveyor witnesses got into the box and was cross-examined by Mr. Hawke, K.C., as he then was. Mr. Hawke soon elicited the fact that the estimate which was being put forward in the box was not the surveyor's own estimate but a builder's pricing. He had never seen a man made so unhappy as that surveyor was. The younger members of the profession should bear in mind that if they went into the box they should be ready with their own estimates, and be prepared for cross-examination on them. A propos of that he recently had a case acting for the lessee where the landlord's schedule was prepared by an architect ; a bill of quantities was by a quantity surveyor, and a builder inserted the prices. All he could say was that he had looked forward to going into Court on that case with the greatest equanimity. Unfortunately it was settled, but otherwise, he thought, the landlord's architect—he was not a surveyor—would have had a very difficult row to hoe.

Mr. E. T. PARR (Chartered Surveyor) said that a great deal of emphasis had been laid on the question of precise measurements and prices. As a standby that was an extremely good weapon, but it was not the measure of the dilapidation. A good many surveyors acting on a lessor's behalf would put to one what was in effect a penalty for a breach of covenant, but that would not stand for five minutes in any Court ; the remedy was the amount of the damage suffered.

Frequently, for example, the lessee covenanted to paint internally in a certain year and externally in a certain year. Unless, of course, that was the last year of the term, the breach of that covenant and the absence of any painting would not cause the landlord, the lessor, to suffer the full value of the cost of the painting in the case of the interior, and it would not cover the cost of painting the exterior. If a lessee covenanted to paint in the fifth year of a term of seven in the interior, the value of that painting to the lessor at the end of the term would be negligible. If, on the other hand, the lessee covenanted to paint the exterior in the fifth year of the term, the damage caused by the breach might be considerably greater than the cost of painting. It was a very difficult point to deal with, because everything depended on the condition of the premises, and, of course, the other covenants in a lease, such as the schedule of condition, and so forth, but he did suggest that, when surveyors were acting for the lessor, they should not adhere rigidly to the price basis. As a quantity surveyor he realised the value of precise information, and the value of a knowledge of prices to all surveyors, but it was rather foolish to tackle a surveyor who knew his dilapidation work with a large amount which could not possibly be justified. He suggested, therefore, that measurement and prices were useful weapons, but, as the author said in his Paper, the method of dealing with dilapidations should be judgment based on common-sense and experience.

Mr. P. CALLINAN (Chartered Surveyor) said the question of electrical dilapidations was of interest. The author referred to it briefly in his Paper and suggested that the services of a specialist should be enlisted, but unfortunately in many of the large modern buildings that would mean that the surveyor would have to share his fees to a very large extent with the specialist. It was a difficult question for surveyors, especially in view of the extent to which electricity was used in modern buildings. Coming to private houses, take an average house let on a twenty-one years' lease, at the end of that period the electrical installation, unless it had been regularly attended to, was practically worthless, and the only thing that one could do was to ask the lessee to reinstate it in accordance with the present rules of the Institution of Electrical Engineers. In the case of a country house with a private generating plant, frequently that was left in the care of the gardener, who knew very little about the upkeep of electrical apparatus, and it was generally in a deplorable condition. He regretted that the author was not present to say how he thought such dilapidations could best be dealt with.

Mr. C. HERBERT BEDELLS (Past-President) said he would like to associate himself with what had been said in regard to the Paper, because he thought it most valuable as a contribution to the transactions of The Institution. There was a doctrine which was called "the doctrine of reserve," but that was a doctrine which did not apply to Papers contributed by members of a professional society to the transactions of their body. If a member of an institution, like The Chartered Surveyors' Institution, had the honour of reading a Paper before his fellow-members, it ought, in his judgment, to be on the basis that he would contribute as much as he could of his knowledge and experience and not as little as he could. He thought that Mr. King had admirably fulfilled that essential requirement, and the members were indebted to him for what he had done.

He rose to deal with two points. One was the question raised by Mr. Davis, who referred to the case of Eyers v. Williams as being an authority in respect of liability for pointing. He happened to have a report of that case in his bag. He had had recently a case in which pointing was claimable, and when he had expressed his opinion as to what the liabilities were under the ordinary covenant with regard to the renewal of pointing, his client said "But "there is the case of Eyers v. Williams, which is entirely "contrary to what you have advised me." He would be glad to see a fuller report of that case, and if Mr. Davis knew of any "authorised" report he would be conferring a great benefit on The Institution if he would include it as a foot-note to his remarks. So far as he himself was aware, the only report which had appeared of that particular case was in the Estates Gazette, and as a result of some enquiries he had made he thought that it was not an "authority" which it would be advisable for members of The Institution to adopt. The effect of that case, so far as reported, was, as Mr. Davis said, that the liability in respect of pointing arose only when the lessor could show that there was "danger" associated with the want of pointing. He did not think the experience of the members present would be that that was the only liability for the renewal of pointing. The touchstone, as he understood it, was rather whether the property was likely to suffer from the effects of the weather because pointing was not renewed. If so, it was then a proper claim to be made and allowed.

The second point as to which he wished to enter a caution was with regard to brickwork. The author said: "A lessee under full-repairing covenants was liable for rebuilding brickwork which was in need of such rebuilding, even to the extent of completely renewing walls and foundations under a 'dangerous structure' notice." The author was, no doubt, referring to the case of Lurcott v. Wheeler, a case in which his (Mr. Bedells') partner was concerned, but the effect of Lister v. Lane must also be remembered. That was a case where the lessor was non-suited when he claimed for the renewal of a building and its foundations, because it was proved that the walls had been built on timber foundations which were entirely rotten, and that it was quite impossible to reinstate the dangerous building except by providing foundations of a different character. If members would read again the report of that case, he thought they would agree that the statement in the Paper to which he had referred was one which required considerable qualification.

There was another point. He did not know how many times members had had to deal with such cases, but he had just had a case which seemed to him to involve a very doubtful issue. The foundations of a wall consisted partly of baulks of timber which in course of time had rotted, but as a probable cause of subsidence there had been removal of subsoil water, and the question was whether the reason of the dilapidation was the defective original foundation or whether it was caused by the abstraction of subsoil water. In that particular case he was fortunately able to arrive at what he thought was a fair settlement, and all parties interested in the property agreed to bear a proportion of the expense without it being needful to decide the legal liabilities.

With regard to the death-watch beetle, he thought the test was whether the efficiency of the part remained. If there was a roof-truss, for instance, which had been affected in certain parts by the death-watch beetle, and yet was so strong that it was likely to perform its functions for many years, he did not think removal of the timbers affected by the beetle was a fair and proper measure of dilapidation so much as the cost of the appropriate treatment of the part affected to exterminate the pest.

Mr. J. W. TYLER, replying to the discussion, said that the question of the schedule setting out the condition of premises at the commencement of a lease had been referred to by Mr. (now Sir Philip) Pilditch in his Paper forty-six years ago, and it was something which he tried to get whenever possible. Expenses were generally the difficulty because the lessee did not see the necessity for it. He or his surveyors might not have had to go through the mill as others had, and did not, perhaps, know the difficulties in dealing with questions at the end of the lease. It was as well to keep on reminding solicitors and others concerned with such questions that such a schedule might save quite a lot of expense in the end.

On the question of field-glasses, he thought it was as well to carry them in case one could not reach the top of some building with a ladder. He found them most useful.

He was glad to hear Mr. Mann say that it was not right for the lessor to call on the lessee to open up drains. He did not mean opening up the ground, but having the man-holes opened (and sometimes going down them oneself) and putting plugs in and testing the drains. That was not a thing which he thought the lessor ought to require from the lessee. If the lessor wanted to do it, he could ; but if he wanted it done by the lessee, it should be put in the lease.

He was inclined to agree with what Mr. Davis had said on rising damp. He doubted whether the Courts would hold a landlord responsible for rising damp under that particular clause, but he was glad to have had an expression of opinion on the point. The Courts, however, were inclined to give the benefit of doubts to the tenant, and the case in point was one where there was a covenant by the landlord (not the tenant) to keep the premises wind and watertight.

He was not sure that he correctly understood Mr. Parr's point, but he gathered it was concerned with the apportionment of the damages for the non-performance of a specific covenant when, say, only five out of the full period of seven years had expired. He had always tried to act, and to get his opponent to act, on the common-sense principle that the cost of the work should be apportioned according to the length of time which had to expire to the end of the term by which the painting, as in the case put, had to be done. If it was five years and it was a seven-year period, it would be five-sevenths of the cost. He generally found that that was agreed to, and he did not think there was any real divergence of view on the point. Whether it was strictly legal or not might be another question.

It was a great pleasure to him to hear Mr. Bedells' appreciation of Mr. King's Paper, and Mr. King, had he been present, would have greatly appreciated it. Many a time he had heard Mr. Bedells, and his father before him, speaking before The Institution on such questions as dilapidation and others on which Mr. Bedells was such an eminent authority, and it was a very great pleasure to hear him say what he did with regard to Mr. King's Paper. The remarks Mr. Bedells made had been most helpful to the discussion ; he had always something interesting to say.

The PRESIDENT thanked Mr. Tyler for replying to the discussion, and moved the following resolution :—

“ This meeting wishes to express to Mrs. King its most sincere sympathy with her in the great loss she has sustained in the death of her husband, and to record its keen appreciation of the practical usefulness to The Institution of his Paper on "The Assessment of Dilapidations, and of the knowledge and ability therein displayed."

It was unnecessary for him to put the resolution because he was sure it would be unanimously received, not by applause, but by the members standing for a few moments in silence.

The resolution was carried by the members standing in silence, and the meeting then terminated.

The following written communication has been received from Mr. FREDERIC SAUNDERS (Chartered Surveyor):—

I am particularly interested in Mr. King's remarks under the sub-heading of "Decay in Timbers," because I am at the moment reconditioning a private dwelling-house where the woodwork and timbers have become infested by the furniture beetle. Mr. King says that the death-watch beetle attacks hardwoods only; in the case, however, of the furniture beetle no wood appears to be immune. The devastation wrought in the case with which I am dealing is almost incredible; flooring, plates, ground joists, first-floor joists, lathing, skirtings, rafters, ceiling joists, slating battens, and even window nosings, have been attacked and in most cases riddled. The house has only been built about thirty years, and yet nothing short of gutting the house can be relied upon to remedy the trouble. Worm-holes were visible in the flooring but not in the painted woodwork, such as skirtings, because the damage had proceeded at the back.

I should like to put other surveyors on their guard should they find worm-holes when inspecting a building. I can imagine a lessor claiming that the woodwork of his building had been destroyed by the introduction of the furniture beetle in the lessee's furniture, and I wonder whether any such case has ever arisen.

PAPER 546.

MAINTENANCE CLAIMS.*By F. Sydney Turner (Professional Associate).

---

To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution on Monday, 6th March, 1933.

---

The law relating to Maintenance Claims is very scanty, and much of the practice obtaining has no statutory authority, but is governed by Departmental Rules by which the taxpayer is granted what is known as "concessional relief."

In these notes it is proposed to survey the statutory and concessional reliefs as at present administered by the Board of Inland Revenue.

The main statutory provisions governing maintenance claims are found in the Income Tax Act, 1918, Schedule A, No. V.—Deductions and Allowances, as amended by—which rule (as amended) reads as follows:—

Finance Act, 1922, Section 25 ;

" 8.—(1) *If the owner of any land or houses to which this rule applies shows that the cost to him of maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management, according to the average of the preceding five years, has exceeded, in the case of land, one-eighth part of the annual value of the land as adopted under this Schedule, and in the case of houses (the authorised reduction,*) he shall be entitled in addition to any reduction of the assessment for the purposes of collection, on making a claim for the purpose, to repayment of tax on the excess.*

* Finance Act, 1932, Sec. 28 (3), substituted for "one-sixth part of that value."

(2) For the purposes of this rule the term ' maintenance ' shall include the replacement of farmhouses, farm buildings, cottages, fences, and other works where the replacement is necessary to maintain the existing rent (and shall also include additions or improvements to farmhouses, farm buildings, or cottages, but only if no increased rent is payable in respect of the additions or improvements, and in so far as they are made in order to comply with the provisions of any statute or the regulations or bye-laws of a local authority).*

(3) This rule shall apply to any land (inclusive of farmhouses and other buildings, if any) or house, the assessment on which is reduced for the purpose of collection : Provided that no repayment of tax shall be made under this rule in respect of the cost of maintenance, repairs, insurance, or management, if or to such extent as the cost has been otherwise allowed as a deduction in computing income for the purposes of income tax.†

(4) In comparing, for the purpose of this rule, the cost of maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management of any land or houses, the total cost of the maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management on any land managed as one estate, or of any houses on any land managed as one estate, or of any houses on any such land, shall be compared with the total annual value of the land or houses, as the case may be.

(5) All the provisions of the Income Tax Acts‡ which relate to claims for (any allowance of deduction§) or the proof to be given with respect to those claims, shall apply to claims for repayment under this rule and the proof to be given with respect to those claims:

Provided that if the owner of any land or house makes and delivers to the surveyor of any district in which the land or house is wholly or partly situate a declaration as to the cost to him of maintenance, repairs, insurance, and management, and the surveyor is satisfied as to the correctness of the declaration, the amount of the allowance to which the owner is entitled under this rule shall be certified by the surveyor, and repayment shall thereupon be made in accordance with his certificate.

* Added by Finance Act, 1924, Sec. 25.

§ Finance Act, 1920, Sec. 32.

(6) In computing the five-year average for the purposes of this rule, the year shall be taken to be the year ending on the 31st day of March, or such other date as may be adopted by the owner of the land or houses with the consent of the surveyor of the district, and the five preceding years shall be taken to be those preceding the commencement of the year for which the tax in respect of which a claim for repayment is made is charged.

It is also incumbent that Rule V. (7) of the Income Tax Act, 1918, as amended by subsequent Acts, should be borne in mind to appreciate the concessional reliefs granted by the revenue. This rule, as amended to date, reads as follows:—

“ 7.—(1) Where tax is charged upon annual value estimated otherwise than by relation to profits, the following provisions shall have effect:—

- (a) In the case of an assessment on lands inclusive of the farmhouse and other buildings (if any), the amount of the assessment shall, for the purposes of collection, be reduced by a sum equal to one-eighth part thereof ; and
- (b) In the case of an assessment upon any house or building (except a farmhouse or building included with lands in assessment), the amount of the assessment shall, for the purposes of collection, be reduced—
  - (i.) where the owner is occupier or chargeable as landlord, or where a tenant is occupier and the landlord has undertaken to bear the cost of repairs, by a sum equal to the amount of the authorised reduction hereinafter mentioned ; and
  - (ii.) where a tenant is occupier and has undertaken to bear the cost of repairs, by such a sum, not exceeding the amount of the authorised reduction, as may be necessary to reduce the amount of the assessment to the amount of the rent payable by him :

Provided that the amount by which the assessment is reduced shall not, in the case of an assessment exceeding the amount of forty pounds, be less than it would have been if the amount of the assessment had been forty pounds.*

(2) Where the amount of the assessment in the case of lands (inclusive of the farmhouse, and other buildings) is more than one-eighth (below the rent,† and in the case of any house or building (except a farmhouse or building included with lands in assessment) is less than the rent by a sum greater than the authorised reduction which would be allowable if the assessment were on the amount of the rent,* after deducting from such rent any outgoing which should by law be deducted in making the assessment, this rule shall not apply.

(3) The authorised reduction for the purposes of this rule shall be—

| (b) Where the amount of the assessment exceeds forty pounds but does not exceed one hundred pounds ; | A sum equal to one-fifth part of the amount of the assessment.                                                                |

The appropriate form of claim is No. 99, which may be had on application of H.M. Inspectors of Taxes. The form, it will be observed, is composed of two schedules ; instructions as to completion are set out on page 1 thereof.

SCHEDULE No. 1.

The taxpayer is required to complete only columns 1 to 5, as under:—

Column 1—Name of present occupier.

„ 2—Description, and name and address of each property.

„ 3—Parish and income tax assessment number.

„ 4—Rental for the year of claim.

„ 5—In the case of houses, state whether repairs done by owner or by tenant (if each does part, say so).

† Added by Finance Act, 1923, Sec. 28 (2).

Columns 6 and 7—Deductions already allowed for repairs, lands and houses respectively, and columns 8 and 9—Net amount charged to income tax, at reduced rate and at standard rate, will, if desired, be completed by the Inspector of Taxes. Generally, the instructions are clear and explicit and should be carefully followed. There are, however, one or two points which should be particularly noted in relation to the question as to properties to be included in the schedule.

Instructions (1) and (2) state particulars should be given of all the lands and houses included in the estate the assessments on which are reduced for the purposes of collection (see Rule 8 (3) of No. V., Schedule A, Income Tax Act, 1918), with two exceptions:—

- (a) Properties occupied by the owner in respect of which the full cost of maintenance, repairs, &c., is already allowed as a deduction in computing profits for income tax purposes, e.g., shops, market-gardens (farms assessed under Schedule D), or other business premises ;
- (b) Properties let on the condition the tenant bears the cost of internal and external repairs.

The expression “ included in the estate ” must be interpreted in the light of Rule 8 (4) in which the expression “ managed as one estate ” appears.

It will be noted that a large estate which is really managed as a single unit cannot be parcelled up so that certain properties only are included and others omitted, because in respect of same the expenditure upon them is less than the statutory allowance for repairs. Every assessed item must be included in the claim every year.

The Revenue appear to adopt the view that the term “ managed as one estate ” clearly refers to management only and does not depend upon the physical contiguity of the properties, and the question must be determined in relation to facts in the nature of the management.

The fact that all the lands and/or houses are managed by the same person or agent does not necessarily imply the whole must be regarded as one estate. The facts may entitle the owner to treat them as separate estates if they are, in fact, managed separately. In any case, a man who owns a few scattered houses could treat each house as the subject of a separate claim, or he may elect to lump them together as one "estate" so long as he is consistent in his choice.

It should be further remembered that the relief of duty in respect of maintenance is a Schedule A relief only, and the maximum relief obtainable is the tax on the aggregate of the net Schedule A assessments.

It may happen that, in completing Schedule 1, the owner may disclose the fact that in certain cases the rent current in the year of claim exceeds the net assessment by more than the statutory allowance, and that the Revenue reduces the average cost of maintenance as calculated for the claim not only by the statutory repairs allowance given in the Schedule A assessment, but also by the amount by which the current rent exceeds the gross assessment, e.g. :—

| Gross value of house at last revaluation ... | £55 |
|----------------------------------------------|-----|

|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Rental for year of claim for entry incolumn 4, Schedule 1 (Form 99) ... | £75 |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|

Legally no repairs allowance is admissible, since the amount of the assessment is less than the rent by a sum greater than the authorised reduction which would be allowed if the assessment were on the amount of rent . . . . (Schedule V., Rule 7 (2) as amended). Both gross assessment and net assessment are therefore £55, and no maintenance claim can legally be preferred in respect of the same. In actual practice, however, a concessional allowance is generally given by the Inland Revenue and the repairs allowance made on the usual basis, e.g. :—

|------------------------------------|-----------|
| Gross assessment ... ..            | £55       |
| Allowance for repairs 1/5th ... .. | 11        |
|                                    | <hr/> £44 |

The fact that the repairs allowance in this case is a "concession" will be of material importance in dealing with a maintenance claim in respect of such property, in which case, assuming the average cost of repairs for the preceding five years was £35, a claim in respect of such expense would be calculated as follows:—

|                   |     |     |    |
|-------------------|-----|-----|----|
| Additional relief | ... | ... | £4 |
|-------------------|-----|-----|----|

|                           |     |    |
|---------------------------|-----|----|
| Statutory allowance given | ... | 11 |
|---------------------------|-----|----|

|                         |     |     |
|-------------------------|-----|-----|
| Total repairs allowance | ... | £15 |
|-------------------------|-----|-----|

If, however, no concessional allowance has been given and the assessments are made according to provisions of statute, the claim would be dealt with as follows:—

|                         |     |     |     |
|-------------------------|-----|-----|-----|
| Average cost of repairs | ... | ... | £35 |
|-------------------------|-----|-----|-----|

|      |     |     |     |
|------|-----|-----|-----|
| Rent | ... | ... | £75 |
|------|-----|-----|-----|

|                       |     |     |     |
|-----------------------|-----|-----|-----|
| Less Gross Schedule A | ... | ... | £55 |
|-----------------------|-----|-----|-----|

|  |   |     |
|  | — | £20 |
|--|---|-----|

|                     |     |     |
|---------------------|-----|-----|

Tax is therefore in either case ultimately paid on £55 - £15 = £40, which represents the actual income from the property, i.e., rent £75 minus repairs (actual) £35 = £40. From the point of view of pure equity there would seem to exist justification for the Revenue seeking to correct an under-assessment, but they have no power normally to raise additional assessments in non-valuation years to keep pace with rent increases.

Rule 7 (2), No. 5 of Schedule A, specifically prohibits any repairs allowance in cases such as above, and it would appear that, technically, it may be competent for the Inland Revenue to raise an assessment to cancel such repairs allowance which may have been given in every such case so as to produce an assessment to duty equal to what it would have been if the gross value was based on the rental value. In practice, however, this is seldom done, but when the owner seeks relief by way of maintenance claim, the authorities at once take advantage of the disclosure.

The measure of the value of these concessions will be appreciated if it is borne in mind that in Rule 8—which is the sole statutory authority for the Additional Maintenance Relief—it is clearly shown that such relief applies only to properties the assessments on which have been “reduced for the purposes of collection,” and since the properties in dispute will have their ordinary repairs allowances disallowed by additional assessments, they will, ipso facto, fall outside the scope of Rule 8 altogether. Hence, not only would the additional relief for maintenance be disallowed, but the ordinary reductions in the Schedule A under Rule 7 would be lost also, and it would therefore not be politic to challenge the correctness of the disallowance of the excess rent, as the writer has known to be done in certain instances, which brought a ready rejoinder from the Inspector of Taxes impossible to refute, as will be appreciated from the foregoing.

No observations on the completion of columns 1, 2 and 3 would appear necessary—The Rentals, Income Tax Assessment Register, or Demand Notes, should furnish sufficient details.

Column 4—Rental for year of claim—may possibly be a source of difficulty. Shortly, the position is, where the property is let at a “rack-rental,” i.e., what the property would let at, assuming that the tenant pays all usual tenant’s rates and taxes and the landlord bears all usual landlord’s charges, and also the cost of repairs and insurance, the “rack-rental” should be entered. In cases where the landlord pays any or all of the usual tenant’s rates and taxes, such payments must be deducted from rent actually paid to determine rental value.

If property is in the occupation of the owner, then the annual value as adopted for purposes of Schedule A assessment should be entered.

The annual value of all lands, &c., in the hands of the owner—private park, semi-detached lands, &c.—must be included although there may be no apparent direct outlay on them.

In the case of groups of cottages or weekly properties, particulars may be inserted en bloc and the tenants' names omitted.

Where claims are made every year, it is generally sufficient to fill in statement of alterations in rental in lieu of the repetition of every item of rent in detail.

Exceptions from the schedule are:—

- (a) Properties, occupied by the owner, in respect of which the full cost of maintenance, repairs, &c., is already allowed as a deduction in computing profits for income tax purposes, e.g., shops, market-gardens, and other business premises ;
- (b) Properties let on the condition that the tenant bears the cost of all repairs (outside as well as inside).

The inspector of taxes is always ready to give advice where there is any doubt as to the inclusion of any item in the schedule, and to furnish the why and wherefore of its inclusion or otherwise.

Before dealing with the question of items for inclusion in Schedule 2, we will consider certain matters of practice in connection with maintenance claims generally.

CASES OF FIRST CLAIMS AND WHERE PARTICULARS OF EXPENSES FOR FIVE YEARS ARE NOT AVAILABLE FOR DETERMINATION OF AVERAGE.

In cases of first claims, and where information as to expenditure is not available in consequence of the failure of the owner to preserve such particulars, the Inland Revenue generally adopt strict interpretation of Rule 8, and only expenditure which can be proved to the satisfaction of the Commissioners is admitted.

In cases, however, where an owner has newly acquired an estate and is not able to procure particulars of expenditure by the previous owner—or is not able to show that his predecessor did, in fact, render maintenance claims—the Inland Revenue, by concession, will generally offer him one of two alternatives set out below.

It must be remembered that there is no statutory authority for any maintenance relief during the first five years of ownership, and any relief given is therefore essentially a Departmental concession.

Rule 8 of No. 5 clearly states: "If the owner . . . shows "that the cost to him . . . according to the average of the "preceding five years . . ."

CONCESSIONAL RELIEFS ALTERNATIVE.

- (1) Allowance of claim for actual expenditure in each of first five years of ownership, upon the owner undertaking on the first occasion of claim that the same basis will be adopted for each of the succeeding years until there are five years in the average.

The following examples will indicate the possible effects of this arrangement:—

| Year.      | AggregateStatutory Allowance. | Actual Cost of Repairs. |             |             |
|------------|-----------------------------------|-------------------------|-------------|-------------|
|            |                                   | Example (A)             | Example (B) | Example (C) |
|            | £                                 | £                       | £           | £           |
| 1924-5 ... | 50                                | 120                     | Nil         | 150         |
| 1925-6 ... | 50                                | 150                     | 300         | 250         |
| 1826-7 ... | 50                                | 100                     | 80          | 70          |
| 1927-8 ... | 50                                | 20                      | 100         | 160         |
| 1928-9 ... | 50                                | 45                      | 120         | 360         |
| Totals ... | £250                              | £435                    | £600        | £990        |

Maintenance claims, in the above examples, would be admitted for excess expenditure as under:—

| Year.      | Example (A). | Example (B). | Example (C). |
|            | £            | £            | £            |
| 1924-5 ... | 70           | Nil          | 100          |
| 1925-6 ... | 100          | 250          | 200          |
| 1926-7 ... | 50           | 30           | 20           |
| 1927-8 ... | Nil          | 50           | 110          |
| 1928-9 ... | Nil          | 70           | 300          |
| Totals ... | £220         | £400         | £730         |

In considering the above examples, it will be observed in (A) 1927/8 and 1928/9 the actual expenditure is less than the statutory allowance, and there is, in consequence, no "excess" expenditure, and therefore no claim can be maintained under this head for either of these years. In fact it may be the Revenue will seek to disallow so much of the statutory allowance as is in excess of actual expenditure, on the grounds that the relief is an equitable allowance and as such should not exceed the excess on the five years' average basis, which is legally all the taxpayer could claim. Hence, actually, in example (A), the five years' average excess expenditure would be—

|                  |     |     |     |     |      |
|------------------|-----|-----|-----|-----|------|
| Actual           | ... | ... | ... | ... | £435 |
| Less statutory   | ... | ... | ... | ... | 250  |
| Aggregate relief |     |     |     |     | £185 |

whereas it has been indicated an aggregate relief of £220 has been given, by disallowing—

|                                   |   |     |
|-----------------------------------|---|-----|
| Excess statutory allowance 1927/8 | — | £30 |
| Excess statutory allowance 1928/9 | — | 5   |

we have a balance of ... .. £185

indicating that the Revenue argument for such disallowance is irrefutable. This same is also applicable in the case of Example (B) for 1924/5, as will be seen on examination.

It must be remembered that relief is restricted to the actual Schedule A tax paid, and, therefore, if in any year the actual expense exceeds the gross assessment of the property, the excess of such expense is lost until the end of five years, when it comes into claim for average in succeeding years.

This would, in Example (C) 1928/9, restrict the claim for that year to the net annual value figure of £300, the balance of £10 coming into average in succeeding years, e.g. :—

|----------------|-----|-----|-----|-------|
| Actual expense | ... | ... | ... | £360  |
| Gross value    | ... | ... | ... | 350   |
|                |     |     |     | <hr/> |
|                |     |     |     | <hr/> |

Actual repairs £360 less statutory allowance £50 = £310 excess repairs. Excess repairs £310 less n.a.v. £300 = £10 excess expense disallowed for year 1928/9 but due to come into average of subsequent years.

The second alternative might be as follows :—

ALTERNATIVE.

(2) To determine expense by taking one-fifth of the expenditure to previous 6th April (or such other date immediately preceding upon which the accounts are customarily made up).

i.e., 1st year of ownership—no allowance as no expense sustained by owner in previous year.

2nd year of ownership— $1/5$ th of first year's expenditure.

3rd year of ownership— $1/5$ th of aggregate first two years' expenditure.

4th year of ownership— $1/5$ th of aggregate of first three years' expenditure.

GROSS VALUE £350 ; STATUTORY ALLOWANCE £50 ; N.A.V. £300.

| Year.      | AggregateStatutory Allowance. | Actual Expenditure. |              |
|------------|-----------------------------------|---------------------|--------------|
|            |                                   | Example (A).        | Example (B). |
|            | £                                 | £                   | £            |
| 1924-5 ... | 50                                | 360                 | 45           |
| 1925-6 ... | 50                                | 150                 | 20           |
| 1926-7 ... | 50                                | 100                 | 100          |
| 1927-8 ... | 50                                | 20                  | 150          |
| 1928-9 ... | 50                                | 45                  | 360          |
| Totals ... | —                                 | £675                | £675         |

Total allowance for repairs to be admitted (including the statutory allowance) would be as follows:—

| Years of Claim. | TotalExpense. |      | TotalExpenditureAverage. |      | StatutoryAllowance. |      | AdditionalRelief due on |      |

| 1927-8 —4th „   | 610               | 165  | 122                              | 33   | 50                      | 50   | 72                          | Nil  |
| 1928-9 —5th „   | 630               | 315  | 126                              | 63   | 50                      | 50   | 76                          | 13   |
| 1929-30—6th „   | 675               | 675  | 135                              | 135  | 50                      | 50   | 85                          | 85   |

It will be seen from the foregoing, in the case of very heavy expense in the first years of ownership (compare examples (A) and (B)) this alternative will conceivably be a more advantageous basis than that of actual expense set out in (1) in the first alternative, although, normally, the actual expenditure basis is the more generally adopted.

In cases where the maintenance expenditure of the previous owner is available, the following concessional basis of relief may be granted, i.e. :—

Allowance in the average of the figures agreed upon in maintenance claims of previous owner until the new owner has completed a series of five years upon which to base his own claim under the provisions of Rule 8.

SCHEDULE No. 2.

Inland Revenue instructions as given on Form No. 99 are as follow:—

“(8) Care should be taken to exclude—

(a) all expenditure in respect of properties not included in the Schedule No. 1; and

(b) all expenditure not coming under the heads of maintenance, repairs, insurance and management, e.g., rates and taxes, tithes, rent-charges, ground rents, annuities, interest, expenses of farming or gardening or of rearing or preserving game, outlay on improvements or extensions (except such additions or improvements as are referred to in No. 10 below), compensation paid to tenants in respect of the value of unexhausted manures, &c.

(9) The amount of relief claimed in respect of the estate may be based either—

(a) on the separate expenditure on lands and houses respectively, or

(b) on the aggregate expenditure on land and houses together.

Where alternative (9) (b) is adopted, the aggregate figures may be shewn in lines (i.), (ii.), and (iii.).

(10) The term “maintenance” includes the replacement of farmhouses, farm-buildings, cottages, fences and other works where the replacement is necessary to maintain the existing rent, and also includes additions or improvements to farmhouses, farm-buildings or cottages, but only if no increased rent is payable in respect of the additions or improvements and in so far as they are made in order to comply with the provision of any Statute or the regulations or bye-laws of a local authority.

(11) The claimant shall verify the claim by the production of receipted bills, accounts, books, &c. In case of doubt as to the precise form of verification, the claimant should consult the inspector of taxes.”

It will be seen that the term “maintenance” embraces a considerably wider range than a mere dictionary definition would imply, e.g., in certain cases, under specified conditions, the replacement of farmhouses, farm-buildings and cottages, including additions or improvements thereto.

It is well first carefully to examine Section (2) of Rule 8, No. 5, Schedule A, Income Tax Act, 1918, as amended by subsequent Acts (see page 149): "For the purpose of this rule " the term ' maintenance ' shall include the replacement " of farmhouses, farm-buildings, cottages, fences, and other " works where the replacement is necessary to maintain the " existing rent."

REPLACEMENTS.

The test here is, Was the expense necessary to maintain an existing rent? Suppose a farm be unoccupied (void) and it is found necessary for the owner to incur expenditure on works of renewal or replacement on a reletting: the Revenue would argue, as there is no existing rent to maintain, no expenditure so incurred is admissible. The expense is deemed precedent to obtaining a rent at all. If, however, a defaulting tenant fails to fulfil his obligations to repair, and absconds, and the owner has to make such amends in order to let, in so far as such expense does not include any element of improvement or alteration, it would be admitted as necessary to maintain an existing rent.

It should be noted in this connection that, if capital expenditure is necessary by way of replacements without disturbance of fixed rents of tenants in possession, no claim is admissible in respect of such expenditure, because the existing rent could obviously be maintained without replacements being done.

However, normally, if an owner can prove, e.g., by correspondence with tenant, the rent he has previously received can no longer be maintained owing to the condition of the property, he would have a clear case of the admission of the whole cost of such replacement, provided, of course, no element of improvement could be imputed although gratuitous to the tenant.

It is obvious that property (i.e., farmhouses, farm-buildings and cottages) may receive ordinary reparative attention for a long time ; but at length the time arrives when repair is no longer possible, and renewal becomes imperative to retain a tenant at an existing rental. Any intelligent owner with capital would, in effecting such replacement, modernise his property by the introduction of present-day ideas, and this knowledge invariably induces an Inspector of Taxes to resist his claim for the inclusion of the entire cost in the claim, claiming—

- (1) additions and improvements ;
- (2) probability of increase in rental values by reason thereof.

Here is clearly a case for compromise ; some part of expense must be admissible, and it is always advisable to appeal to the Commissioners if the Inspector refuses to give way.

The term “ and other works ” is frequently a source of difficulty and misunderstanding on the part of a claimant. It has been held in the Courts that the maxim ejusdem generis must be applied, i.e., “ where you have a word “ which may have a general meaning wider than that “ which was intended by the Legislature, when you find it “ associated with other words which show the category “ within which it is to come, it is cut down and over-ridden “ according to the general proposition,” or the words must be read to mean “ and works required of the same kind “ as those specified.”

ADDITIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS.

The question of the inclusion of cost of additions and improvements in the claim must be subjected to the two conditions set out in Rule 8 (2), i.e. :—

- (1) Is any increased rent payable?
- (2) Was the work necessary to comply with any statute or the regulations or bye-laws of a local authority?

The insertion of the word “ and ” between these two provisos should be noted in the regulations—the conditions are coincident, not alternative.

If the answers to questions (1) and (2) above are No and Yes respectively, then, prima facie, the expense is admissible ; any other answer will at once exclude the expense.

In connection with question (2), Mr. Snowden, in the House of Commons debate on Section 25 of the Finance Act, 1924, said :—

“ Suppose a local authority required the water supply to be improved—that would be covered ; suppose a local authority insisted upon drainage being improved—that would be covered ; suppose they insisted upon sanitation so as to make the property come up to the requirements of the local authority—that would be covered. Any large expenditure of that kind would come within the terms of my amendment.”

The Attorney-General speaking on this same amendment said :—

“ In order to comply with the provisions of any statute or regulations . . . , the words are not limited to cases where there has been an order, or any compulsion, but include the case of a landlord who voluntarily does without any order that which is necessary in order to bring the house up to the requirements of the regulation or standard.”

Such statements of responsible Crown officers in debate do not, in fact, determine the legal application of any clause of an Act, but it will be found that the practice of the Inland Revenue Department is absolutely in harmony with such statements.

The cost of works of additions and improvements from motives of policy or progress are inadmissible unless, in addition, they can be made to comply with the two conditions set out above.

Surveyors having management of rural properties are continually faced on a relet with demands for what, but a few years since, were considered purely urban amenities, and it is sometimes difficult to fix a line of demarkation between improvements and purely reparative work, e.g., a farm which has been in the occupation of an old-established agricultural tenant for a considerable period comes into the market to let ; after protracted endeavour a new tenant is found—at a considerably reduced rent—and then only provided water-carriage sanitary system is installed, and a modern bathroom fitted. There is at present an antiquated hot and cold-water service in the farmhouse, but totally inadequate for the new tenant's requirements. Work involved may include any or all of the following: Well to be deepened ; larger storage tanks ; increased drainage capacity required ; hot-water system to be entirely renewed, and 1-inch service-pipes to be replaced with 2-inch ; existing bathroom totally inadequate, and another room has to be taken in and fitted ; &c. Such items as these are fruitful sources of exercise of ingenuity when dealing with expense in claim.

Having experience in dealing with maintenance claims of a large agricultural estate, the writer has found that, to secure an equitable settlement of such claims, it is essential that great care should be exercised in the preparation of the material of the claim.

Generally, Inspectors of Taxes and their staffs have neither the time nor the ability to make up for want of information which would enable them to dissect the multitudinous items of expenditure which go to make up the ultimate admissible expense, and therefore, if the claim is submitted bearing evidence of careful discrimination on the part of the surveyor, and he is able to produce verification of his figures in the form of receipted bills, accounts, books, &c., much of the Inspector's work is relieved and mutual advantage gained.

Imagine the feeling of one Inspector who was interviewed by a juvenile owner of a country estate (which he managed himself) who called, bringing with him three trunks of books and papers, with the request that he should be instructed in the matter of the preparation of his first maintenance claim by the Inspector by the actual drawing of a claim from the medley of information to be culled from the contents of the three trunks. In that Inspector's office, I am informed, the average time allotted to his staff per claim (all classes) is three minutes.

Such cases are, of course, exceptional, and it is to be hoped the experience gained by such owner was such as to impress upon him that, in spite of the intricacies and obscurities of income tax law and Inland Revenue practice, it is for him to take advantage of the skill and knowledge of the professional surveyor to make good his own personal deficiencies, and that the taxpayer cannot be expected to provide him with a staff to prepare his claims at other than his own expense. In any case, claims in respect of expenditure of the nature indicated provide the surveyor with scope for the exercise of ingenuity and diplomacy, and time and application devoted to the analysis of expenditure will bring its own reward.

Undoubtedly the expenditure includes inadmissible works of improvement, but, nevertheless, reparation is also indicated, and it is in the determination of this latter the success or failure of the claim depends.

COUNTRY ESTATES.

In the case of country estates no inconsiderable proportion of materials required for maintenance are produced at home, e.g., timber, stone, gravel, lime, &c., cost of hauling and handling such materials. Care should be taken to see that this material is brought into account for maintenance charge, as such as is paid for from outside. In addition the following items should also be included:—

Annual value of cottages occupied rent free by estate staff ;

Pensions to retired estate servants, or widow of deceased servant (Departmental Instruction — Official Letter of 19/6/1924) ;

Cost of arbitrations to fix rents ;

Cost of customary rent audit luncheons ;

- Amount of customary allowances to cottage tenants on paying their rents ;
- Compensation paid to workmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act (not paid by insurance company) where such workmen are normally employed on maintenance works ;
- Subscriptions to hospitals, nursing associations, where such subscriptions are for the benefit of maintenance staff. If other employees are included in benefit, then proportion of such subscriptions (on a per capita basis) will be admitted ;
- Agricultural lime provided for farm tenants ;
- Cost of analysis of water for purity ;
- National Health and Unemployment Insurance contributions in respect of maintenance staff ;
- Employer's liability insurance premium in respect of maintenance staff.

MANSION-HOUSE.

Where the mansion is let, the landlord can include in his claim all expenditure actually incurred by him on maintenance or repairs.

Where the owner is also the occupier, the owner can include all expenditure on repairs and maintenance which he has actually incurred, with the exception of those items which are such as usually fall to be performed by a tenant, even where such tenant is under no express liability for repairs. Such excepted items would include:—

- Sweeping chimneys and flues ;
- Clearing valley gutters and cistern heads ;
- Cleaning windows ;
- Running expenses in connection with lighting and heating, periodical flushing and cleansing of drains ;

Rolling and keeping walks and drives ;

Mowing and rolling lawns ; &c.

The above list, by no means exhaustive, indicates the class of works excepted. The following items of expenditure would be admitted:—

Structural repairs, inside and out ;

Maintenance of all landlord's fixtures ;

External painting ;

Internal decoration necessary to maintain the existing character of mansion ;

Water service (including fire mains), maintenance and renewals ;

Lighting plant, maintenance and renewals, including cost of renewal of storage batteries ;

Heating apparatus—maintenance and renewals ;

Drains, sewers and sewage disposal—maintenance and renewals ;

Drives, maintenance of, re-marking and re-metalling ;

Gardens, maintenance of glasshouses, heating apparatus, walls ;

Insurance of structure.

Of course where there have been any extensions or improvements, such expenditure as is attributable to such works would be disallowed.

If a mansion is unoccupied, a caretaker only being in charge, the expense in maintaining the interior of the house heated and aired is inadmissible, but the cost of maintenance and repairs would be allowed.

The acid test to be applied is whether as owner or as occupier the expense falls upon the taxpayer.

Those items which would, if the place were let, be the liability of the tenant, cannot in equity be added to the total cost of maintenance to the owner, even though as occupier he pays for them. The fairness of this rule will be readily appreciated if comparison is made, say, of two neighbouring properties, one let and one occupied by the owner—clearly both are entitled to the same treatment.

The additional items of insurance and management to be entered in Schedule No. 2 (Form 99) are not likely to cause much difficulty, and should be adequately vouched for.

Insurance would represent all expenditure on insurance of buildings, but not the contents thereof or the like.

Management could not, of course, include remuneration of an owner who manages his own estate. Any other expense connected with management actually incurred should, of course, be included, e.g., postages, printing, surveyor's reports, &c.

As to the method of calculation of relief of duty claimed, the Schedule No. 2 (Form 99) is self-explanatory and should offer no difficulty.

It may be observed that, although strictly the additional relief of tax in respect of maintenance, &c., of property is to be made by way of repayment of Schedule A duty, if the claim is in the hands of the Inspector of Taxes sufficiently early, the relief may be given by way of discharge of Schedule A duty due, but the collection of tax will not be deferred for completion of a claim.

Finally, the owner's sur-tax assessment should be adjusted by the amount of the agreed excess expenditure upon which relief of Schedule A duty has been given.

ELECTION OF HONORARY MEMBER.

The PRESIDENT said he had pleasure in moving from the Chair that Mr. A. S. Gaye, C.B., O.B.E., Commissioner for Crown Lands, be elected an Honorary Member of The Institution. It would be remembered, he said, that not long ago Mr. Gaye read a Paper to The Institution on the management of Crown Lands. He held a very distinguished position as a civil servant, and the Council were of opinion that, if he consented to become an Honorary Member, he would confer distinction on The Institution.

The motion was carried.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. F. SYDNEY TURNER'S

MAINTENANCE CLAIMS.

Mr. DRYLAND HASLAM (Member of Council) said that he had much pleasure in moving a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Turner for his Paper.

Maintenance claims were often difficult. They required much experience and thought, and Mr. Turner had saved surveyors a deal of trouble by setting out so clearly the various rules and regulations and the various reliefs.

The first portion of the Paper hardly called for any observations, but on page 152 Mr. Turner referred to the term "managed as one estate." Sometimes on an estate there might be properties on which little had been spent by way of repairs. If those were brought in, the relief which could be obtained was reduced considerably. It was sometimes possible to bring in large blocks of cottage property as one estate, and perhaps to ignore the farms or some of the other property on which not so much money had been spent.

With regard to Mr. Turner's observation that a man who owned a few scattered houses could treat each house as the subject of a separate claim or might elect to lump them together, his own experience was that it was better to lump them together. In some years little or nothing might be spent on one house, but by bringing them all in together the one averaged out the other.

On page 155, with regard to Mr. Turner's observations on column 4, personally he did not think it was necessary to go to the trouble of deducting the cost of rates, &c. If the gross rent for the cottages was shown a rent inclusive of rates and repairs, the Inland Revenue people had the information in their office so that one could sometimes get away with things a little more easily. It did not, as a rule, affect the matter, as Schedule A was nearly always accepted.

On page 156 there was the expression "semi-detached lands," and he would like to know what that meant. He was familiar with semi-detached houses but did not quite understand what was meant by "semi-detached lands."

Mr. Turner referred to two exceptions from the schedule in respect of properties let on the condition that the tenant bore the cost of all repairs. There were many cases where the tenant did some repairs, and there was the common case where the tenant did inside and the landlord outside repairs. In those cases the properties could be included, and the inspector wrote back the repairs for which the tenant was responsible and then made the statutory deduction, and, if one brought those in, one would get some benefit from them.

In the case of first claims where one could not get information as to what had happened in the past, one could sometimes get an estimate passed. Generally speaking, when deciding to make first claims, it was best to get out figures to see which method would give the best results, and claim accordingly. Sometimes it paid to put in "nil" for each of the first four years to get the average of five years, instead of claiming on the one year, because it often happened that when a client first purchased a property he spent a lot of money in the first year and perhaps for the next few years he did not spend anything; or, if he spent a great deal in the first year, bearing in mind that he could not get a claim for more than the whole of Schedule A, it was better to bring in the other years and get an average.

One sometimes found, in the case of those claims where a client had just bought a property and spent a lot of money on it, the inspector would try to disallow some part of that expenditure, claiming that the property had been bought a great deal cheaper because it was in a bad state of repair, and therefore a great deal of what had been spent on the property should be termed "capital expenditure." Personally he always resisted that attitude as far as possible, because if proper repairs had been done during the previous four years one would have had to pay more for the property. Therefore, on the principle of taking it in meal or in malt, if that expenditure had not been made and one had to make it in the fifth year, it was only fair that one should get due allowance.

With reference to the question at the bottom of page 167, in regard to deduction in the case of country estates, one could, of course, only deduct the annual value of a cottage occupied rent free by one of the estate staff provided he was wholly employed in maintenance work; if not, one was entitled only to a proportionate deduction.

The Paper set out so clearly the various things which could be deducted, done and not done, that he was sure it would be a very valuable addition to the Transactions, and he thought the knowledge that 25 per cent., or, in the case of surtax payers, a very much greater proportion of the cost of repairs, could be recovered should certainly encourage owners to keep their properties in good repair. At the present time, when there was a great deal of unemployment, it should encourage them to do more than they would otherwise do, knowing that the State would shoulder in a year or two, by allowances from income tax, a considerable proportion of the cost of the work done.

A point to which he particularly wished to refer was the reference Mr. Turner made as to consulting the inspector. Personally he advised members to consult the inspector when making their claims, and he wished publicly to state that, in his opinion, based on an experience of over forty years, inspectors of taxes as a general rule were most fair-minded men. If one went to them frankly and gave them a fair and straightforward statement not only in regard to maintenance claims but in regard to other income tax claims and returns, they could be, and were, of great help to oneself and one's clients.

He congratulated Mr. Turner, and had great pleasure in moving a hearty vote of thanks to him.

Mr. JOHN A. F. WATSON (Professional Associate Member of Council), in seconding the vote of thanks, said he thought the Paper was an excellent one. What impressed him most was the delightful way in which Mr. Turner sailed over paragraph (2) of Schedule A, No. V., Rule 7. With the permission of the members he would like to read that paragraph once more: "Where the amount " of the assessment in the case of lands (inclusive of the " farmhouse and other buildings) is more than one-eighth
" below the rent, and in the case of any house or building " (except a farmhouse or building included with lands in " assessment) is less than the rent by a sum greater than
" the authorised reduction which would be allowable if the " assessment were on the amount of the rent, after deduct" ing from such rent any outgoing which should by law be " deducted in making the assessment, this rule shall not " apply."

The application of this section, during the last year, had been a source of trouble to him personally in dealing with claims on certain large estates of weekly property in London. He was afraid his remarks would be somewhat unintelligible unless members could jot the figures down, but he would try to show the difficulties he had encountered and the valuable concession which he had recently obtained from the Inland Revenue.

The proviso simply meant that if one had a property assessed at gross £100 and net £80, and during the quinquennial period the rent went up above £100, if the amount by which the rent exceeded the gross assessment was more than the repairs allowance would be if the assessment was on the actual rent, then the repairs allowance was taken away. If one had, for example, a property which was assessed at £100 gross and £80 net, that meant that the repairs allowance was £20. If the property was let at £150 a year, the repairs allowance, if the assessment agreed with the rent, would be £28. It was then necessary to ascertain whether the disparity between the rent and the gross Schedule A assessment, viz., £50, exceeded the repairs allowance on the rent, viz., £28. It did ; and therefore the repairs allowance was disallowed.

The important point to observe about that provision was that up to a certain figure the owner was safe and did not lose his allowance. The gross Schedule A assessment being £100, all was well until the rent got to £125, but at £125 the owner suddenly reached the point where the rent exceeded the assessment by more than the allowance ; he then tumbled, as it were, over a precipice, and the whole of his repair allowance was taken away from him. The greatest care was necessary to ensure, when making a claim, that the rent had not increased above the assessment as far as the " tumbling point," with the result that the owner might lose by prosecuting the claim instead of gaining.

In the case of the particular estates with which he was dealing—and he expected many surveyors dealt with maintenance claims on weekly estates—he first made his claim as follows : Assume the rents on the estate originally totalled £4,000 and the gross Schedule A assessments totalled the same figure. During the quinquennium period the rents had gone up and were now £1,000 above the gross Schedule A, i.e., £5,000. In the case of weekly properties that would be accounted for by a number of them becoming decontrolled. Assume the claim for excess maintenance was on the sum of £1,500. The Revenue said : " This claim is " not good because you are returning the rents in one block ; " you must return the rent for each individual property,

“and also specify the amount spent in each individual “case.” In the case of the particular estate to which he referred, it was very difficult to get out the individual amounts of rent received from each dwelling during the year, and to dissect the time-sheets to show how much was spent on each property. It was, in fact, impossible to do so. He therefore replied that it could not be done, and he was then told that, as the rents exceeded the Schedule A gross by £1,000, and the claim was on £1,500, the £1,000 would be subtracted from the £1,500, making the claim £500. The Revenue described this as the “alternative basis.”

That did not seem to him at all satisfactory, and then it occurred to him—and that was the point he wanted to make—that, when weekly property was assessed to Schedule A, a 50-week year was taken. Thus a considerable proportion of the disparity of £1,000 between the rent and the Schedule A assessment was obviously accounted for. By pointing that out he had obtained the concession that, where he could not individualise rents, he could deduct from the disparity of £1,000 one twenty-fifth of the gross Schedule A assessment to represent the extra two weeks’ rent. That made an immense difference. If he took £1,000 from his claim of £1,500, he was left with only £500. But if he could first deduct from that £1,000 one twenty-fifth, not of itself but of the gross Schedule A, i.e., £4,000, he could take £160 from £1,000, which left him only £840 to deduct from the £1,500. He therefore retained £660 of his claim, which was 32 per cent. more than he would have retained if he had not been allowed that concession of one twenty-fifth. That was an important concession, and had made a difference to the company for which he was acting of several thousands of pounds.

Mr. W. F. LANGRIDGE (Chartered Surveyor) asked the lecturer whether he had had any experience of maintenance claims in connection with sales of property. He had been an agent for an estate for a good many years, and the estate accounts and claims had always been made up to Michaelmas. Soon after Michaelmas, 1931, he sent the claim in, and it was agreed about January or February, 1932. The amount was to be repaid by a refund of the Schedule A out of the 1932-33 Schedule A, which was paid in January, 1933. The property was, however, sold during 1932, with completion to take place at Michaelmas of that year. The inspector of taxes now said that the owner was only entitled to half the maintenance allowance for expenditure incurred during the year ending Michaelmas, 1931, and that the other half was to be divided amongst the thirty purchasers, and that if a claim was made including expenditure up to Michaelmas, 1932, the whole amount would go to the purchasers. Therefore it was not, as Mr. Turner suggested, a case of the cost going to the owner. The purchasers got the benefit of the excess allowance, and the allowance would not go to the owner at all. He would in fact lose one and a half years' income tax and surtax—if he paid surtax—on the excess because he had paid full income tax up to the time of the sale of the property. He would like to know if Mr. Turner had any experience with regard to that point.

The PRESIDENT asked whether the purchasers had completed the transaction.

Mr. LANGRIDGE said the purchases were completed about Michaelmas, the estate being cut up into thirty different lots. Some of the lots might have had no money spent on them for some years, such as the woodlands. The inspector said in his last letter that the fact that the expenditure was actually incurred by the first owner was immaterial, such expenditure forming merely a basis on which to calculate the relief provided for ; and the relief went to the new purchasers, and not, apparently, to the man who had actually expended the money.

Mr. J. G. ELSWORTHY (Chartered Surveyor) said that there seemed to be some divergence of opinion between surveyors of taxes with regard to what was meant by "maintenance." He remembered having a long argument with a surveyor of taxes on the question of the allowance for management of a block of London property. The surveyor of taxes would not allow it, and argued for a considerable time. Finally he had said "If you like to call it supervision I will allow it." The speaker's own intelligence was not capable of appreciating the difference between management and supervision, but apparently there was some distinction known only to the Inland Revenue.

It was interesting to hear Mr. Watson's point with regard to the 50-week business. Personally he remembered a case where he had great difficulty in persuading a surveyor of taxes to give the necessary allowance. The circumstances were as follows: A large amount of property in the centre of London was mainly occupied by foreign tenants, they were mostly quarterly tenants and shopkeepers, and were in the habit of putting aside money for their rents until it was nearly quarter day. Then they would put all the money on a horse. Their theory was that when the horse won they could pay their rent and have the winnings of their speculation for themselves, but the horse usually did not win, and so there was great difficulty in getting the rents. He thought the best thing would be to remove temptation from those people's way. They were anxious to have leases, so they were told that leases could be arranged on the understanding that the rents were collected weekly thereafter. From that day to this not a penny of rent had been lost from that estate. The agent then asked himself whether it would not be possible to get the 50-week allowance for the estate, and after a considerable amount of argument and emphasis upon the amount of time and labour expended in collecting the rents, he had succeeded in getting it. As Mr. Watson said, it did make a considerable difference where a large amount was concerned.

He wished to join with previous speakers in thanking Mr. Turner for his Paper, which had already provoked a very interesting discussion.

Mr. E. A. STAPLEDON (Chartered Surveyor) said he would like advice on the question of what was and what was not maintenance. He had a case at the moment where, on a farm previously occupied as an overland and having no farmhouse, two cottages had been converted into one farmhouse for the purpose of maintaining the rent. As a matter of fact the rent had not been maintained ; it had been necessary to take a little less. The inspector had said " When you bring this up I am not going to allow it ; it is " not maintenance, but improvement." Personally he questioned whether it could be regarded as improvement. It was an alteration admittedly. The tenant would not take the farm unless it was done.

He would like to know what arguments he could bring forward to substantiate his claim that what had been done was not an improvement. There was no doubt he would get a maintenance claim for things on which a sanitary inspector might insist, such as improved water supply, drainage, and so on, but the inspector said " You have made " a beautiful new dwelling-house out of these cottages." As a matter of fact that was not correct ; all that had been done was to knock the two cottages into one house, and there was nothing elaborate about it at all.

He noticed Mr. Turner said one could bring into a maintenance claim lime supplies to an agricultural tenant, and he would like to ask why lime only, and why not basic slag or other manures? He had a case a short time ago where a manure allowance was made instead of a reduction of rent, but the inspector did not agree to it, and he had to give way on a bargain that the equivalent sum was allowed off Schedule A. He found it difficult to see what arguments he could adduce, except that it was necessary to do it to keep the man there and get the rent paid.

It was, however, the question of the two cottages in which he was principally interested, and that was a class of thing one so often had to do.

The PRESIDENT asked to what manure did the manurial allowance mentioned by Mr. Stapledon refer.

Mr. STAPLEDON replied that to the best of his recollection it was basic slag ; at any rate it was a manure to be used on permanent pasture land only.

Mr. GILBERT GARDNER (Member of Council) said Mr. Stapledon had referred to a maintenance claim for lime applied to the land. That interested him very much, and he would like to know if he had correctly understood the point.

Mr. STAPLEDON replied in the affirmative ; there was an allowance for lime supplied by the landlord to the tenant, or in respect of an allowance made to the tenant for lime.

Mr. G. TURVILLE BROWN (Vice-President) said that over large districts wherever there was heavy land which had been underdrained the drains were just about worn out, and an enormous campaign of draining would have to be undertaken. If that work had to be done to maintain the rents, it would be a very proper item to put into a maintenance account. The maintenance account, so far as he had had experience of it, was generally a matter of far more importance on the country estates than it was in the town. Mr. Watson had given his experience with his town properties, but as the President had said to him that evening, the day on which a land agent in the country received a cheque for the maintenance account was, for him, a red-letter day in the year. At the present time to a great many people the maintenance account properly rendered and agreed to on a fair basis by the inspector of taxes (as most of them would agree was generally done) was a matter of the greatest moment.

He would like to thank Mr. Turner for his very interesting Paper. He had called attention to one of the most important things with which a country land agent had to deal.

Mr. J. H. HALL (Member of Council) asked Mr. Turner if he had had any experience of maintenance claims for the replacement of fruit trees. In a maintenance claim last year and the year before with which he had been concerned he had put in an expenditure of £100 or £200 for planting certain farms with plum trees. The inspector of taxes, although he disallowed it, seemed rather doubtful of his ground, because the argument was that the trees had been planted to maintain the letting value of the land or farm. He would be interested to hear if Mr. Turner could throw any further light on that. Personally he intended to try for it again in regard to some further expenditure next year.

On page 149 of the Paper Mr. Turner said that no allowance would be made if increased rent was payable in respect of additions or improvements. In that case, however, he had found that the inspector of taxes would allow something. To give an instance, where it had been necessary to rebuild a set of farm buildings or a portion of them, and £1,000 had been expended in the replacement of the farm buildings, the rent of the farm had been increased by £15 a year. The inspector of taxes took the £15 a year and capitalised it at twenty years' purchase, making £300, and he took off the £300 from the expenditure of £1,000 and allowed the balance of £700 to be brought into the maintenance claim.

Another interesting point showed the different ways in which different inspectors of taxes dealt with various things. It had been necessary, in the case of a house rented at £30 or £40 a year, to put in a new drainage system and connect it up to the sewer at a cost of £300. The inspector said "I am not going to allow any of this; it is an 'improvement.'" A few years ago he had been concerned with a somewhat similar case, where about £200 had been expended on the re-draining of a house in the same district, not with the same inspector, but with his predecessor. The inspector in that case would not allow it, and an appeal was lodged and the matter came before the Commissioners.

Eventually the chairman of the Commissioners said to the inspector of taxes " I have heard that the local authority " did not compel Mr. Hall to have this work done, but, " Mr. Inspector, do you think it is reasonable to wait until " the children living in that house are all down with scarlet " fever before these drains are relaid?" and the inspector replied that he had not thought of that. The result was that the Commissioners allowed the whole of the £200, and he proposed to go before the Commissioners again on the case to which he had referred to see what happened.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Mr. TURNER (Professional Associate), in reply, said he was very grateful to the members for the kind way in which they had received his endeavour to air his information on the subject of maintenance claims.

So far as he was concerned he had had no experience of town property at all. He was concerned with a country estate in a very isolated corner of England, where they really had not the heart to fall out with the inspector of taxes. They saw so very few people that when they met him they met him as a friend, and they got to know quite a lot about what should be included in claims simply by presenting everything to him, and, incidentally, that was how they learned that agricultural lime could be included in a maintenance claim. It so happened that three years ago they made a grant to a tenant of agricultural lime. They had an account called " General Sundries," and they did not know where else to put that item of expense. In the revenue account they analysed " General Sundries," and indicated that an item of expense of £25 was in respect of agricultural lime. He took that account to the inspector's office. The inspector looked down the list and said " That " lime will be admitted ; that is all right ; agricultural lime " to-day, when supplied to tenants, is admissible in a maintenance claim." He did not ask him for chapter and verse of that ; he said " Thank you very much," and left it as that.

With regard to sales of property and the question of the purchaser getting the advantage in his Schedule A in respect of a previous owner's disbursements, he had come across that point on one occasion. An estate was converted to a private company, and the question arose as to what was going to happen in the first year of the company's existence, and whether or not they were going to miss the five years' average of the previous expenses. He went to the inspector and cautiously inquired what was going to happen with the maintenance claim. The company was formed on the 28th October and the accounts closed on the 31st March. The inspector indicated that the previous owner would no longer be entitled to maintenance relief, but that the company itself would enjoy the relief in respect to the expense for repairs and maintenance which the previous owner had enjoyed. In that case they did not lose the advantage, but he had come across another case in which a man bought a house and immediately on entry enjoyed the benefits of the previous owner's expenses, because, as the inspector said, maintenance relief was in respect of the year preceding the year of assessment. That was the rule of the Act.

With regard to the question of fruit trees, he had never heard of the replacement of fruit trees being admitted in a maintenance claim. He would be interested to hear if it were admitted, because, although people did not go in for fruit in Norfolk, they were endeavouring to develop black currants, and he would be pleased to be able to include cost of renewal of a plantation of black currants.

The question of new buildings and whether a thing was an improvement or not was very difficult, and he was afraid it was not for him to attempt to say whether an expense was admissible or not. So much depended on the facts of the case. He knew of one case in which, before the work was carried out, the inspector of taxes was approached and told what was going to be done. It was in connection with a row of cottages which were a disgrace to the community, although the sanitary authorities had not lodged a complaint. It was determined to close those cottages down and build new ones, and remove the tenants from the old to the new cottages. They went to the inspector and told him what their proposal was, and he said "Why do not you see the local sanitary authorities and get them to make a move in the matter?" So they went to the local sanitary officer, and he said "Well, there are many worse cottages in the district, and I do not see why I want to worry myself about them ; if you are going to build new houses I will leave them alone and you can shift your tenants out." The new cottages were built, and the tenants removed to them from the old ones, and the old ones were barricaded up and taken out of the rate-book, and the expense of the new ones by way of replacement was immediately admitted by the inspector.

His experience had been that, if one took one's accounts to the inspector of taxes and carefully discussed with him the points involved, so that one was able to put him in possession of information which would enable him to determine the points at issue, that was the best course to adopt. Personally he had always found inspectors of taxes to be persons who dealt efficiently with a very arduous and onerous task, and were ready at all times to see that the fair thing was done by the owner.

The PRESIDENT said that although the audience that evening might not be very large, the Paper would go before six or seven thousand members of The Institution, and would be an invaluable guide and book of reference to those who were less familiar with maintenance claims than the author. He was sure The Institution was very much obliged to him and to the speakers who had taken part in the discussion.

The proceedings then terminated.

THE INSURANCE OF BUILDINGS against Risks incident thereto and the Adjustment of Losses by Fire thereon.

By J. McMullen Brooks (Chartered Surveyor), F.C.I.I.

---

*To be read at the Ordinary General Meeting of The

[NOTE.—Since there will be little opportunity during the meeting for reference to the rather numerous "Exhibits" used to illustrate the Paper, it has been arranged that they shall be available in The Institution Library during the week prior to the meeting, i.e., 3rd to 10th April.

In view of the length of the Paper it is proposed that only a short précis shall be read at the meeting, and the subject then thrown open for discussion.]

The preparation of these notes has given me some pleasure, and if with the discussion that is to follow they have the effect of adding to the general knowledge of the subject, I shall feel that my time has not been unprofitably occupied. That insurance has not been more frequently dealt with at our meetings is perhaps not so surprising since, although we are all both personally and professionally interested in insurance, it is in its broad outlines so simple as not to require exposition, and in its almost innumerable ramifications so complicated as at any rate in the time at our disposal to defy it.

Fortunately I am asked to deal with only a section of the subject, and on that I shall do my best to speak to the point.

Insurance had not been the subject of a Paper read before you from the foundation of our Institution in 1868 until one of our Past-Presidents handled it generally from the point of view of a surveyor having wide experience, but not primarily, at any rate, as a specialist, in 1902.

A great many of the doubts then apparent have since been resolved, and I believe there is a very much clearer appreciation of the value of insurance to-day than there was thirty years ago.

We were then reminded that insurance was rooted in antiquity.

PROGRESS.

I agree that the art, science or business of insurance stands on an old and very sound foundation, but it cannot be denied that however conservative it may be on its financial side, it is extraordinarily progressive in its usefulness and the services it renders to the public. Figures may give some indication of this progress. When The Institution was founded in 1868, the leading companies collected between them a premium income from underwriting fire risks approximating £5,000,000 per annum. When the first Paper on insurance was read to us in 1902 this figure had progressed to £14,750,000 per annum, and last year it approximated £40,000,000 per annum.

In the period cited—over sixty years—rates of premium have been very much reduced, and the profit earned by these great companies on this vast turnover is comparatively small. There is, of course, variation between the amounts earned from year to year and between one company and another. But taking the great companies as a whole over a period of years, the average rate approximates 4 per cent. of the premium income. Last year it was 3·63 per cent.

The practice for very many years past has been to place even this small margin to the reserves which constitute the policy-holder's security.

It is probably because the firm for which I am responsible has been practising as surveyors to the Insurance Companies for well over a century that I have been asked to submit these notes. Such a wealth of experience should imply erudition, but I have striven for simplicity, because in practice apparent difficulties are usually simply soluble by the application of governing principles and the conditions of the contract to the precise circumstances under consideration.

If in the course of my remarks appreciation of the adaptability of insurance to modern needs is apparent, it is, I think, justified, and I may, perhaps, be allowed to mention a body that has done much by the interchange of ideas and information to knit together the large number of workers in the insurance field.

THE CHARTERED INSURANCE INSTITUTE.

Within the period of my professional career Insurance Institutes have been formed in the Homeland and more or less throughout the world. These Institutes occurred at first more or less sporadically (I was among the original members of the London Insurance Institute). All were amalgamated under one governing body in 1897, and in 1912 a Royal Charter was granted. Now the Chartered Insurance Institute is known and respected throughout the world. Informative Papers on insurance matters are constantly being read at the London and Provincial branches of the Chartered Insurance Institute, many of them being published in the Insurance Press. So that if Insurance men are not au fait with the latest developments in insurance matters, they are at least provided with the means of making themselves so.

THE BASIC PRINCIPLE.

I propose now briefly to examine the principal insurable risks that building owners are subject to, commencing with the standard policy for insuring a building against loss by fire, and then passing, in review, the several additional risks that may be covered and the normal methods of granting cover. I should, however, first state the underlying principle governing insurance contracts, since it is by reference to this that many doubts may be resolved.

PROPOSAL FORM.

The contract is founded on a proposal form and recorded in a policy. Examples of proposal forms are laid on the table marked Exhibit "A." It will be seen that the information required is such as to enable the company to estimate the risk to be covered. It deals with the construction and occupation of the buildings to be insured, and requires information as to previous insurance and particulars of declinature and fires, if any. Proposals to cover risks other than fire require additional information pertinent to the risk that is to be insured against, and examples of these are included with the policies to which they relate.

This proposal form is a safeguard for the proposer, and serves as a reminder to him of his duty to disclose facts which it is material that the company invited to undertake the risk should know.

As is well known to you, "non-disclosure of material facts" invalidates the policy; hence the importance of the proposal form and of filling it in correctly. When on the happening of a fire it is found that the policy contains serious misdescription, the usual explanation is "Oh, I didn't know that," and sometimes because of the absence of a proposal form the same excuse is tendered but with more assurance.

In this connection the report of a family council, when father was filling up his proposal form for life insurance, may be quoted as an example how not to do it. They had reached the question "Any insanity in the family?" Daughter (loq.): "What about auntie who thinks she's 'Queen Elizabeth?'" Mother: "Oh! no one takes any notice of what she says, she's been 'potty' for years"—and father fills in the answer "No."

The law requires disclosure of material facts, and the proposal form points to them. I hope, then, you will appreciate that the proposal form is for the protection of the proposer, and see to it that in cases where you are responsible a proposal form is properly filled in.

THE POLICY.

Standard Form.—Exhibits "B" on the table are examples of Standard forms of policies for insuring buildings, and I hope members have had an opportunity of perusing them.

The face of the policy states that during the currency of the policy, and subject to the policy conditions, if the property insured or any part thereof is destroyed or damaged by—

- (1) fire (whether resulting from explosion or otherwise) not occasioned by or happening through
  - (a) its own spontaneous fermentation or heating or its undergoing any process involving the application of heat ;
  - (b) earthquake, subterranean fire, riot, civil commotion, foreign enemy, military or usurped power, rebellion or insurrection ;
- (2) lightning ;
- (3) explosion of boilers used for domestic purposes only ;
- (4) explosion in a building not being part of any gas works, of gas used for domestic purposes, or used for lighting or heating the building, the company will, in consideration of the premium, pay the insured the value of the property at the time of its destruction, or the amount of damage to it, or, at the company's option, reinstate the property or any part thereof.

Then follow the name of the insured, and the particulars of the property and amounts for which each separate building is to be insured, all taken from the instructions contained in the proposal form.

Now I think you will agree that there is here fairly comprehensive cover in return for a rate of premium which varies, according to the class of risk, from 1s. 6d. per annum for each £100 insured, the risks covered including damage by fire, lightning, explosion of domestic boilers, and of gas used for domestic purposes or for lighting and heating the building. Gas works excluded.

Given accurate particulars and a sufficient insurance, no difficulty should arise in connection with a claim for loss by any of the hazards insured against.

CONDITIONS.

Now as to the standard conditions printed on the policy — there are eleven of them — let us glance at them. Nos. 1, 2, 5, 8 and 10—that is five of the eleven conditions—are, like the proposal form, a safeguard for the policy-holder, being mainly a reminder to him of the principles of Common Law governing Insurance Contracts and provide:—

Nos. 1 and 2, that the policy shall be voidable in the event of misrepresentation, misdescription or non-disclosure or alteration so as to increase the risk or to destroy the insurable interest.

No. 5, that fraud vitiates this as it would any other contract.

No. 8 is the contribution clause setting out the method of apportionment where there is more than one insurance on the same property. I shall deal shortly later with circumstances that may arise where insurances of different interests in the same property are not concurrent, and explain that non-concurrence should, if possible, be avoided, and give two simple examples of how a loss would be apportioned where policies are not concurrent.

No. 10. Warranties which once having been placed upon the policy continue to operate until they are cancelled.

Now those are the five conditions which I say are mainly an exposition of the principles of Common Law relating to Insurance Contracts. Of the remaining six conditions:—

No. 3 explains what is excluded from the cover given viz.: (a) loss by explosion, except as defined on the face of the policy, and dealt with by me on pages 193 and 194. The other two exclusions under sub-headings (b) and (c) could, I think, only in quite unusual circumstances apply in the case of an insurance on buildings, and consequently may be passed over now and dealt with in the discussion if necessary.

Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9 and 11 set out the steps to be taken on the happening of a loss, and to avoid repetition I will deal with them in the second part of my Paper, “The Adjustment of Losses by Fire.”

This Standard Policy, then, is a simple document which is probably well understood by most of us. I have reminded you of its main outlines so that you may the more readily follow what I have to say on matters which are excluded from it. It is a standard policy for insurance against loss or damage by fire, whether resulting from explosion or otherwise, but it includes damage by lightning and from the explosion of domestic boilers whether fire ensues or not. It also includes loss or damage (except in a building which is part of a gas works) by explosion of gas used for domestic purposes or for lighting or heating the building.

ADDITIONAL PERILS.

It does not include loss or damage arising from spontaneous fermentation or heating, &c.—Clause 1 (a) on the face of the policy — nor loss or damage arising from explosion, except as defined in the policy, nor does it cover loss or damage by aircraft, earthquake, riot or civil commotion, storm, tempest, burst water pipes, tanks, &c., sprinkler leakage, impact, workmen's compensation, public liability, loss of rent, accidents with lifts or hoists, and other matters which I propose to touch upon, since, although not included in the standard fire insurance policy, they are, nevertheless, risks which building owners commonly have to face, and which the companies are generally willing to undertake.

Some of them, called "Additional or Extra Perils," are normally covered by endorsement on the fire policy. My Exhibit "C" is of forms of endorsement in use, and I will deal with them in the order in which they appear in my file.

Explosion.—The recent disaster at Neuenkirchen in the Saar district in Germany, where a gasholder exploded and laid waste the countryside, will be fresh in your minds. It is supposed to have originated from a workman cutting a pipe, from which all the gas was thought to have been drawn, with an acetylene flame.

The risk of explosion in some factory buildings may be more or less serious, and is present even in a private dwelling-house. Whilst the standard fire policy would cover damage by or in consequence of fire following an explosion, it would not cover the damage by the explosion itself, generally manifested in cracked, bulged or fallen walls, raised or shattered roofs, doors, windows, &c.

Examples of explosions not arising from gas used for lighting or heating or from domestic boilers may be cited. Recently several shop fronts were blown out by an explosion attributed to the ignition of sewer gas.

An explosion in a grocer's shop with dwelling-rooms over, which would not be covered by a Standard Policy but would be covered if the general explosion risk were added, was found, after enquiry by experts appointed by the Electricity Commission, to have arisen from faults in an electric-light main, which heated and caused the bitumen covering to evaporate in the form of a gas. The gas travelled along the conduit, entered the building and there exploded, involving loss of life and considerable damage to building and contents. The explosion occurred early on a June morning when no lights or fires were in use. The theories advanced to explain the ignition of the vapourised bitumen were scientifically interesting but can hardly be dealt with here.

Extensive factory premises where minor explosions were of frequent occurrence and were so handled that no loss resulted. In thirty years, in this particular case, three or four small claims had been paid for fire damage following these minor explosions. Eventually an accident happened, when the damage by fire was negligible and that by concussion considerable. The company were then obliged to point to the fact that this explosion damage was not covered by the standard fire policy. I have cited these examples to satisfy you that the risk of explosion is not one that should be ignored.

Explosion of steam boilers, economisers and other steam plant is excluded from this cover, because it is normally insured under what is known as a "Boiler Policy." My Exhibit "F. 1," which I have dealt with on page 198, deals with this risk.

Aircraft.—Aircraft sometimes collide with buildings, and, as a result, themselves catch fire and set fire to the buildings—the fire damage in this case is covered by the standard policy, but the damage by impact is not. Supposing no fire results from the impact, the sufferer would not be able to claim under his standard fire policy. If, however, his policy had been endorsed to cover damage by aircraft, not only damage by impact but also that caused by articles dropped from aircraft would be covered.

Riot and Civil Commotion, &c.—Damage by fire or otherwise resulting from riot or civil commotion, rebellion, insurrection, military or usurped power, strikers, locked-out workers, persons taking part in labour disturbances or malicious persons acting on behalf of any political organisation, is excluded from a standard fire policy, but may be covered by endorsement.

The whole of the risks I have set out—explosion, aircraft, riot, civil commotion, &c.—may be covered by endorsement on a policy covering a private dwelling-house for an additional premium of 3*d.* per £100 insured, and you will probably agree that in cases where cover is available at this rate of premium it should be taken.

Further additional perils which are excluded from the standard fire policy, but which may be insured against either by the issue of a separate policy or by endorsement of the fire policy, include:—

Earthquake and damage by fire directly caused by earthquake or subterranean fire, which are definitely excluded from the standard policy.

Storm, Tempest, &c.—Loss or damage by storm or tempest.

Bursting or Overflowing of water supply-pipes, and tanks and apparatus connected therewith.

Impact.—Impact with the building or its boundary walls, fences and gates of any road vehicle, &c., not belonging to or under the control of the insured, or any member of his family, are further additional perils that may be insured against, and my Exhibit “ D ” is of the form of endorsement used in the case of these last four perils—earthquake, storm, tempest, &c., bursting, &c., of pipes, tanks, &c., and impact—the minimum rate of premium for a brick or stone-built and slated or tiled private dwelling-house of other non-hazardous risk being 9*d.* per £100 insured.

Burst pipes, including heating pipes and radiators, were very numerous in the severe cold spells in 1929 and 1931, and damage by storm and tempest may be serious especially perhaps in the case of modern single-storey factory buildings roofed with slates and glass.

I remember a case where the damage extended over ten acres of slated and glazed roofs and amounted to a considerable sum. The gale lifted or loosened the slates from the eaves upward, broken slates falling upon and breaking the glazed parts of the roofs. Where the roofing was protected by gable walls no damage was done.

Impact may not be a serious risk, but lorries do run into fences and gate-posts, and have been known to destroy shop fronts, and having drawn your attention to the fact that this risk can be insured against, cases where cover should be taken will readily suggest themselves.

Sprinkler Leakage.—Sprinklers, drenchers, &c., are a valuable form of fire protection, but, like other defensive weapons, have been known to go off when not called upon to do so. The companies issue a special form of policy to cover the risk of loss or damage from this cause, my Exhibit "D. 1" being specimens of the forms in use. Minimum rate of premium for buildings 3*d.* per £100 insured, the insurance being subject to average.

You will understand that if the sprinklers operate by reason of a fire, the loss would be covered by the fire policy, and that this sprinkler leakage policy is only intended to be called upon in case of accidental leakage.

My firm have dealt with several claims under such policies—a recent one arose from sprinkler heads being knocked off by an accident during the removal of some heavy packing cases.

Reference to the policy will show that leakage, when repairs or alterations are in hand, is not covered, and that risks which would normally be covered by other forms of insurance are excluded, as is also risk arising from wilful neglect. The rate is low, and where sprinklers are installed this form of cover should be taken.

Workmen's Compensation.—The engineering, cleaning and other staffs of work-people commonly employed in large blocks of buildings would, of course, be covered under the Workmen's Compensation Acts. My Exhibit " E " is of policy forms used in these cases, and this note is intended merely as a reminder.

Lift Insurance.—Buildings frequently contain passenger and/or goods lifts, hoists, &c. Accidents sometimes happen with these. I was interested in a case where a visitor opened the lift gate on the ground floor and, the lift being on one of the upper floors, stepped into space. Fortunately he did not fall far, but my clients paid damages and costs approximating £2,000. This risk is commonly covered by insurance, my Exhibit " F " being examples of policies in use.

Accidents to Third Parties sometimes result in claims against the owner of a building. Examples in my own experience include accidents with cellar flaps, pavement lights, a postman slipping on the stairs, and a child falling down an area. You will all have had experience of claims of a similar nature, sometimes successfully disposed of with a little sympathy, and, perhaps, a little present, but the latter may be construed as an admission of liability. Where the claimant is persistent, although there may be no legal liability, the person on whom responsibility is alleged to rest may be involved in a considerable sum for costs of his defence—often irrecoverable. Such claims may be insured against at very moderate rates, varying from a premium of 2s. for a shop with a £300 indemnity to 7s. 6d. or 10s. for a block of offices with a £500 indemnity for any one accident.

Plate Glass.—The insurance of plate and other glass against breakage has been common practice for many years, and in cases of glass-roofed structures, as some factories, nurserymen's greenhouses, &c., breakage by hailstones can also be covered.

Boiler Insurance.—Steam boilers and similar vessels and apparatus are generally and should invariably be insured under a boiler policy. For specimens please see Exhibit "F. 1," which will, subject to the exceptions, definitions and conditions endorsed thereon, indemnify the assured against damage to the boiler, &c., itself, to property, including that not belonging to the assured, and for fatal or non-fatal injury to persons not in the service of the assured.

I just touch on this because boilers, &c., are a common appurtenance to many buildings, and because in dealing with explosion risks I noted that boiler explosions were excluded. Periodical inspection and examination by the insurance company's engineer is a condition of this class of insurance, and one of the very valuable advantages obtained from it.

The Boiler Explosions Acts of 1882 and 1890—from which boilers used exclusively for domestic purposes are exempt—require notice of an explosion to be given to the Board of Trade within 24 hours after the occurrence, with penalty for non-compliance, the information attached to the notice to include, inter alia, the name and address of any society or association by whom the boiler was last inspected or insured. On receipt of notice the Board may hold an enquiry, and the costs of the enquiry are within the discretion of the Court.

The property insured is, I think, having glanced at the risks that may be covered, the next matter for our consideration, and it will be well understood that an insurance on a building will include the structure and such of its appurtenances as landlord's fixtures, decorations and other matters properly appertaining to the building as are the property of the insured.

RENT.

The rental value of the building is not covered by the insurance upon the building, but requires a separate amount upon it.

The amount of this insurance should be the full rental value enjoyed in person or receivable from others by the insured, and the period of insurance should be such as to allow time for reinstatement in the case of complete destruction.

It is usual to insure the amount of the annual rental value for a period of twelve months, but in cases where reinstatement might occupy a longer or shorter period, the longer or shorter period may be insured. In cases of buildings let out as a whole or in parts, sometimes under varying conditions, the terms of the lettings must be examined, and no doubt cases will be found where the loss of rent will fall upon the lessee or occupying tenant and not on the landlord: in those cases the lessee or tenant should insure. Whilst leases commonly provide for the insurance of the structure of the building, they do not so commonly provide for the insurance of the rent. I submit they might.

Exhibit "G" on the table gives examples of various rent clauses—that I have marked is the one generally in use, and its intention is to afford indemnity for whole or partial loss of rent during the period for which it is insured, e.g., if the building is subject to damage only and is not destroyed, the whole of the rent is not necessarily lost.

PROFESSIONAL FEES.

Another item of loss that frequently occurs when a building of any importance is destroyed or damaged is the cost of architects' and surveyors' fees involved in the reinstatement. If the amount insured upon the building would be sufficient in case of total destruction to cover this part of the cost of reinstatement, I do not think any question should arise under this heading ; but in cases where the insurance is manifestly insufficient, if the building had been completely destroyed, to cover the builder's cost of reinstatement, it is, I think, equitable to assume that when effecting the insurance the proposer did not intend to include architect's, &c., fees, and that they should be disallowed. Many buildings are, alas! erected without the employment of an architect or surveyor, and a vast deal of fire damage is reinstated without the intervention of professional men. It should not be so, but so it is. If the desire is that professional fees should be covered, any doubt or difficulty may be avoided by insuring architect's and surveyor's fees under a separate item.

Exhibit " H " gives the form of wording ordinarily used, and it will be seen that architect's, surveyor's and legal and other fees necessarily incurred in the reinstatement may be covered at a percentage in accordance with the R.I.B.A. Scale—not exceeding 10 per cent. of the amount paid for loss—and that fees in connection with the preparation of the claim are definitely excluded.

IMPROVEMENTS AND/OR ALTERATIONS TO COMPLY WITH REQUIREMENTS OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES.

It is clear that these are not per se included in what I have called the subject-matter of the insurance since they are not part of the property destroyed, and yet there are many cases, and not by any means only those involving complete destruction, where demands are made sometimes of an onerous description for improvements to comply with legislation which has come into existence perhaps since the building was erected.

A great deal of this legislation is directed towards minimising the risk of conflagration, and some of it deals with means of escape in case of fire. The fact of the fire inevitably draws the attention of the authorities to the building affected, and they are in duty bound to make their requirements, so that a comparatively small fire may result in demands for improvements which cannot be denied and which may involve considerable outlay.

It is then important to estimate what would be the approximate cost of improvements and/or alterations that might be demanded, and to insure accordingly. My Exhibit " J " is of forms used for this purpose.

HOUSEOWNER'S COMPREHENSIVE POLICY.

We have been considering a standard form of policy applicable to all buildings with optional but desirable additions to the cover afforded. Private dwelling-houses far outnumber any other class of buildings, and for these the companies have designed a comprehensive policy (my Exhibit " K "). Like the standard form of policy it is preceded by a proposal form (my Exhibit " L ") which forms part of the contract.

It is so very comprehensive that I hope you have all got something of the kind at home that you can study at your leisure, because there will be no time for me to say more than that it covers nearly all the risks I have dealt with, including those I have described in the case of the standard policy as optional but desirable, with the possible exception of " Improvements " and architect's fees. I would then suggest that in cases in which you are called upon you advise that an amount be insured on architect's, &c., fees—for form, see my Exhibit " H "—and that, if the circumstances require, " Improvements " also be insured.

If you glance at the four pages of the policy form on the table (Exhibit " K "), or, better still, study a similar document by your own fireside, you will see that, in addition to all the risks I have mentioned for which the building owner may be responsible, all manner of cover is available for the contents, including fire, burglary and housebreaking, rent, workmen's compensation, even, perhaps, down to " housemaid's knee," always provided the employer is liable under the statutes cited.

All the building owner's risks included in the first part of the comprehensive policy are covered for a premium of 2s. 3d. per £100 insured. Modifications of this policy excluding some of the risks may be had at a slightly lower rate.

Partial insurance is not and could not on such terms be permitted, and I would draw your attention to the declaration on the face of the policy which is a repetition of that at the foot of the proposal form, both of which I have marked, to the effect that the sum insured represents not less than the full value of the property. This is declared to be the basis of the contract. Failure to insure for the full value invalidates the policy, although in cases where the under-insurance is not serious and arises from a genuine misapprehension as to value, it is not unusual for the case to be met by the importation of average.

AVERAGE.

Average is, I think, generally better understood to-day than in the past. I have already laid stress on the desirability of insuring for the full value notwithstanding that, for example, in some old leases partial insurance only is required, the assumption presumably being that partial destruction only is likely. I am not prepared to advise you, even where buildings are what used to be described as "fireproof" and are now called "of fire-resisting construction," to risk the damage being limited to partial destruction. So long ago as 1903 I lent to the Builders' Exhibition, for the section devoted to fireproof construction, a photograph of the ruins of a large, then modern, so-called "fireproof" building, with the laconic title "Fireproof Building—loss paid £78,000." Even ferro-concrete buildings, whilst possibly in themselves fireproof, may be subject to serious damage from the fierce combustion of their contents. Such construction is sometimes more costly to repair than the commoner form. An example was a very large ferro-concrete building shattered by explosion, where the demolition preparatory to rebuilding was an exceedingly costly matter.

What has this to do with average? Why, just this, that so long as insurance is for the full value, average does not operate. If you insure for part of the value you should, in equity, be called upon to bear part of the loss, and, in practice, you may be, although average is as yet by no means universal so far as buildings are concerned. Where average applies, a "partial insurer participates in payment of the loss."

My Exhibit "M" gives the wording of the Standard Condition of Average marked "1"—then follows No. 2—the same condition with, in a second paragraph, the qualification that if any part of the subject-matter is specifically insured elsewhere, the policy shall only be brought into contribution for the excess of value beyond that covered by the specific insurance. For example, a range of buildings is covered for £10,000, subject to both conditions of average. One of those buildings is separately insured for £1,000. The value at the time of the outbreak of the building separately insured for £1,000 is found to be £1,500. Only the £500 by which this value exceeds the amount of the specific insurance would be brought into the calculation for average on the larger policy.

The second paragraph is merely explanatory of the general practice of exhausting the specific policy before bringing that of wider range into contribution.

RENEWALS.

The insurance contract once effected is renewable annually, and insurances frequently continue for long periods without revision. I do not think surveyors are by any means the worst offenders in this respect, but I do think it may be their duty occasionally to give a tactful reminder to their clients. If I add especially to those of the legal profession, it is because I have found a tendency in that direction to "let sleeping dogs lie." In these progressive times even a few years is a period permitting much variation both in value and in user, and it is not uncommon; when the fire happens, to find that the variation in user has materially increased the risk; dwelling-houses get altered into shops or factories, stables into motor-garages; the user of a factory is changed from a non-hazardous trade or brought within risk of one carrying on a hazardous trade, &c. Then as to value, there was between pre-war and post-war times an immense increase in the cost of building, and yet many policies are still extant where pre-war values only are insured. No doubt in response to reminders sent by the companies with their renewal notices, the amounts insured upon buildings have been to an extent revised in an upward direction; but even to-day, when building costs have fallen considerably below the peak figures, it is quite common in the case of total destruction to find the amount insured insufficient to cover the cost of reinstatement. The insurance policies for which you are responsible should always be sent to the company to be endorsed on change of occupancy, and reviewed at renewal when those likely to require revision should be marked for enquiry or inspection.

INSURABLE INTEREST.

More than one individual may be interested as owner in the same building, e.g., freeholder, lessee, occupying tenant, mortgagee, &c., and all may insure for their several interests. This should be done by the names of all interested parties appearing on the same policy or policies. Separate insurances of separate interests are inadvisable, and they sometimes give rise to difficulties when the loss occurs; vide my remarks on Condition 8, the contribution clause.

INTEREST PASSING ON SALE OR OTHERWISE.

Strictly when the insured has disposed of his interest, and consequently has no insurable interest, he cannot recover.

On sale, demise, &c., notice should be given to the company and the policy endorsed with the new owner's interest. Some companies have a provision that where a loss occurs after the contract for sale has been entered into and before completion of the sale, the purchaser will, after completion, if and so far as the property is not otherwise insured, be entitled to the benefit of the policy without prejudice to the rights and liabilities of the insured or the company up to the date of completion. The standard conditions adopted for sale by auction also deal with these circumstances.

WARRANTIES.

Policies relating to more or less hazardous risks are frequently subject to warranties, and it is important in the case of policies that are intended to be "concurrent" to see that the same warranties appear on all of them.

My Exhibit "M. 1" affords examples of a number of forms of warranties taken haphazard.

PROPERTY INSURED BY MORE THAN ONE POLICY OR COMPANY.

I promised to deal further with the contribution clause—Condition 8 on the policy. Time does not permit an exhaustive examination. I will, therefore, just say "See that all your policies are concurrent," i.e., that they contain precisely the same description of the property insured and are subject to precisely the same conditions. This is generally done by drawing a scheduled description of the property and amounts to be insured thereon and apportioning them among the companies who are to undertake the risk. All conditions and warranties applying specifically to the property would be embodied in the schedule, and each company's insurance would be a specified percentage of each of the amounts on the schedule. Policies drawn in this way as contributors to a schedule could not then fail to be "concurrent," and the apportionment of the loss between the several companies who have to discharge it would be a perfectly simple matter.

Methods of apportionment when policies are not concurrent are rather matters for the companies than for the assured and are settled by mutual arrangement, the effect of this arrangement being, so far as possible, to prevent any part of the loss falling on the assured. Where, however, average operates, this desirable result cannot always be achieved, and my example is of a case where, because the policies are not concurrent, the proportion of the loss falling upon the assured is much greater than if the policies (still subject to average) had been concurrent, i.e., £400 instead of £50.

Example.—Three buildings, which we will call A, B and C are valued respectively at £1,000, £2,000 and £3,000, and insured under three policies all subject to average. One policy covers buildings A and B for £900, another, B and C, for £1,000, and the third, A, B and C, for £4,000, a total insurance of £5,900. Building C is totally destroyed, and as the total value of the property (£6,000) exceeds the sum insured (£5,900) the condition of average operates. The first policy will have no liability for the loss as it does not cover building C. The second policy covers buildings B and C for £1,000, and as the value of these buildings is £5,000, the policy is liable for only one-fifth of the loss, i.e., £600. The third policy for £4,000 covers the three buildings, and as their value is £6,000, the policy is only liable for two-thirds of the loss or £2,000.

Although the property was only slightly underinsured by all the policies, the manner in which they were arranged would result in a loss to insured of £400. Had the policies been concurrent in their wording, the insured would have received fifty-nine-sixtieths of the loss, or £2,950, and his uninsured loss would then have been only £50.

I have said that methods of apportionment are the subject of mutual arrangement between the companies. To me this means the great companies who have all been conducting their business for very long periods under constantly varying conditions and have developed traditions and something one may call "personality." For what it is worth, my advice to the policy-holder is that he should cultivate acquaintance with his insurance company, and take full advantage of the valuable service it can offer him especially where risks of considerable magnitude are concerned.

It is in the interest both of insurer and insured that full indemnity should be available when the loss occurs.

It is, however, common to find insurances inadequate in amount or so badly arranged as to lead to disappointment. This could have been avoided if the company had been permitted the assured's confidence, and full advantage taken of the advice and assistance available when the policies were arranged or subsequently varied. Always insure for full value, and see that different policies intended to cover the same subject-matter are "concurrent."

REBATES IN PREMIUM FOR CONSTRUCTION AND APPLIANCES.

So far I have dealt only with non-hazardous risks—fire, &c., risks may be increased by light or faulty construction, by reason of the trade carried on in the premises, by contiguity of buildings used for purposes involving more than the normal fire hazard, &c.

In the case of risks carrying a high rate of premium, very considerable rebates may be obtained by complying with conditions laid down by the companies for construction, extinguishing appliances, &c.

My Exhibit "N" gives details of five different standards of construction which, if followed, entitle the insurer to varying concessions in the matter of premium, and Exhibit "O" gives particulars of the scale of allowances for ordinary forms of extinguishing appliances. There are also special allowances for different standards of sprinkler installations, drenchers, &c.

A glance at these Exhibits "N" and "O" will satisfy you that these matters are constantly under consideration by the companies, and that for up-to-date information the assistance of the insurance companies' experts should be sought. Of the great value of such assistance there can be no question, and of its ready accessibility I can speak from experience gained when my firm have been called upon to advise private clients.

Since reductions of premium, ranging up to and sometimes beyond 50 per cent., are, in certain circumstances, obtainable, it is clear that, especially in the case of new premises, the possibility of so constructing the buildings as to obtain the benefit of these allowances merits close attention.

REINSTATEMENT CLAUSE.—(Exhibit " P.")

When the subject of fire insurance was before this Institution in 1902 something of a grievance was voiced by one of the speakers that the policy covers indemnity only, and does not give the assured new lamps for old. Now indemnity is of the very essence of our subject, and yet in certain cases the companies are willing to grant reinstatement policies which, prima facie at any rate, appear to give something more than indemnity.

These reinstatement policies provide for new buildings on the same or even on another site carried out in a manner to suit the requirements of the insured, but the cost of the reinstatement is only paid if the premises are actually reinstated.

It is clear that it is only in particular circumstances that such policies can be issued. The case referred to by eminent King's Counsel in the discussion when the subject was before The Institution in 1902—where a manufacturer had bought machinery second, third and fourth-hand, placed it in a mill, insured it for £50,000, and then a few months afterwards the mill was burnt down—was not, I think, one in which a reinstatement policy would or ought to have been granted. It was, said the K.C., admittedly a case of arson, but the companies having failed to connect the assured with the arson, the £50,000 was awarded to him.

This is an extreme example, but the refusal by the company of a reinstatement policy may only imply that the circumstances do not appear to the company to justify that form of cover.

I think such policies are generally considered applicable to new and up-to-date premises, and conditions are sometimes inserted to the effect that the premises will be maintained in that condition.

In this connection, i.e., where companies refuse business offered to them, I hope very little consideration will satisfy you that careful selection must be permitted to all underwriters. If a particular company "does not take potteries," or, indeed, any other class of risk, it is possibly because they have suffered bad experience in that direction.

The companies do not set out to take any and every risk that may be offered them, but are generally willing to afford cover on mutually satisfactory terms.

I will now pass to the second part of my Paper, "The Adjustment of Losses by Fire," but before doing so I would like to say that I am quite sensible the notes I have submitted are, perhaps, little more than elementary; I will, however, do my best to deal shortly with any queries that may be raised in the discussion.

THE ADJUSTMENT OF LOSSES BY FIRE.

In the earlier part of my Paper I dealt with six of the eleven conditions, leaving the five which set out the steps to be taken on the happening of a loss to be used as the outline for this part of my Paper.

The conditions are Nos. 4, 6, 7, 9, and 11:—

No. 4 requires notice of the happening of any destruction or damage forthwith and the delivery of particulars of loss within thirty days, and describes the extent and nature of the particulars required.

No. 6 deals with cases in which the company shall elect or become bound to reinstate.

No. 7 gives the company the right to enter on and take possession of the premises where the destruction or damage has happened.

No. 9 is the subrogation condition, giving the company the right to enforce the assured's rights and remedies against third parties.

No. 11 requires all differences to be referred to arbitration, and sets time limits for the appointment of arbitrators, &c.

In the old days some of the companies used to advertise "prompt and liberal settlements." The desire of the companies to achieve prompt and liberal settlements of the losses falling upon their assured is now so widely appreciated as no longer to require advertisement, and these five conditions are framed with the object of ensuring speed with reasonable accuracy. Taking them in order:—

Notice and Particulars of Loss (Condition 4).—Notice of loss is for obvious reasons required forthwith, and the assured should experience no difficulty in informing his company, at least as soon as he is himself informed, that a fire or other accident has occurred on property in which he and his insurance company are concerned. By so doing, he is serving his own interest, since he is at once enlisting the assistance of those whose daily experience is of such happenings but of which he may have had no previous experience.

It may be, and frequently is, possible by prompt measures taken immediately after the fire to avoid difficulties and expense, some of which may not be claimable under the policy, e.g., in the case of partial damage, the undamaged or slightly damaged part of the premises may be adapted for and taken into use immediately. Requirements of local authorities as to dangerous structures, &c., can be tackled without the intervention of third parties, and generally arrangements made so that what at first sight appears hopeless destruction and disorder may, in a comparatively short time, be reduced at least to a partially workable proposition so far as the user of the premises is concerned.

Another advantage that should accrue to the sufferer will be an early meeting with the insurance company's surveyor on the premises affected, when the extent of the damage may be observed in detail and remedial measures taken in hand without avoidable delay: many examples will occur to you. Some valuable old walnut panelling which was, at my suggestion, taken down and stored in a dry place before the water which had run down the wall behind it had had time seriously to affect it. If the panelling had been allowed to go to rack and ruin, it could have only been replaced with a modern copy. Fire destroys, and there is the end of it; but damage by the water may often be minimised, or even avoided altogether, if prompt action is taken.

Particulars of loss are required to be delivered within thirty days, but extension may, if necessary, be arranged without difficulty. The particulars generally take the form of an itemised estimate by a builder, or, if the work is of sufficient importance, a quantity surveyor may be employed. There are, of course, cases where it is also necessary to supply drawings and a detailed specification of what actually existed prior to the fire.

In the case of so-called total destruction of an important building, the difficulty of supplying accurate particulars may, at first glance, appear formidable, but I have found the work of building up from remains accurate drawings and estimates of what existed prior to the fire interesting to the point of fascination.

Valuable assistance can, of course, often be obtained from those who had intimate knowledge of the building before the fire, but I can instance a case where no such assistance was available; that presented some problems. The majority of these were solved by examination of the remains. A full set of drawings was prepared, and quantities illustrated in some instances by photographs taken out. As a matter of interest I have brought the quantities with me. On the title-pages are photographs of the exterior of the building taken before and after the fire, and if you look at the latter I think you may be surprised to find in the quantities photographs of the details of such internal embellishments as ornamental plaster-work, carved woodwork, &c. Some of this was actually in situ after the fire, and some was recovered from the débris.

I urge you, then, when asked to submit drawings and quantities, not to regard the task as hopeless, but to enter on it with a good heart and confidence that you will find a great deal of interest in the work.

I would, however, offer a word of warning against imagination being permitted to take the place of investigation in this work. It is not generally difficult to visualise from the remains what actually existed prior to the fire, and that must be the basis of the estimate of loss. To submit an estimate of what might or ought to have been sometimes leads to disappointment and nearly always to delay.

It will be observed that the condition requires the particulars of loss to have regard to the value of the property at the time of the destruction or damage, and the principle of indemnity which underlies all insurance is pointed to. Now, no surveyor need tax his memory to any great extent to think of cases where indemnity means something less than "new lamps for old." In the case of a building in full beneficial use and occupation minor dilapidations are generally tacitly ignored, but where, say, a row of six cottages were condemned as unfit for occupation years ago, and only one or two of the six tenants now remain at nominal rentals, the cost of building six new cottages would not be the true measure of indemnity.

The claimant is also required to give details of any other insurances, because however numerous his insurances he is only entitled to recover the actual amount of his loss.

Reinstatement (Condition 6).—Dealing with cases in which the company elects or becomes bound to reinstate requires the claimant to furnish, at his own expense, all such plans and information as the company may reasonably require.

As we have seen from the wording on the face of the policy, the company may elect to reinstate. It may also become bound to reinstate because it is called upon to do so by an interested party under Section 83 of the Statute of George III. Act 14, cap. 78, called the “ Fire Prevention “ (Metropolis) Act, 1774,” but which, so far as this provision is concerned, extends to England and Wales but not to Scotland and Ireland. In either case the claimant must supply drawings and specification in sufficient detail to define exactly what has to be reinstated, and that at his own expense.

If the company is called upon to expend the policy monies in reinstatement, a necessary preliminary would be to get all details of the work agreed between the parties before embarking upon it. It is not uncommon where several interests have to be reconciled for the work of reconciliation to take time.

One means of avoiding delays and difficulties arising during reinstatement by the company is to establish the amount of the indemnity due, and in return for a sufficient discharge pay the money into a joint account in the names of all parties who have given notice of their interest.

The parties are much more nearly concerned in the details of the work of reinstatement, and the company having obtained their discharge of its liability under the policy would then leave the work of reinstatement in their hands. This is the course generally adopted where several interests are concerned, but I suppose it must be achieved by agreement between them.

A person claiming reinstatement may obtain an injunction to prevent the money being paid to the assured, but is not apparently entitled to a mandamus to compel the company to reinstate.

If it occurs to you that it is inequitable to throw the cost of supplying detailed particulars of the property destroyed on the claimant, I think a moment's consideration will satisfy you that the alternative would be, if not impossible, far more inequitable.

It has been urged that if the cost of submitting drawings and quantities, or, in other words, proof of loss, is thrown upon the claimant, the indemnity given is not a full one. The liability of the companies in any case is limited to the sum insured, and it would seem inequitable to deplete this before means of ascertaining its sufficiency or otherwise are available.

You will remember that on the face of the policy the company reserves to itself the right to reinstate: this right is now but very infrequently exercised. It is probably retained as a means of defeating an extortionate claim, but practice makes it perfectly clear that other and better means are now generally available.

Then there is the qualification that the reinstatement is to be only as circumstances permit in a reasonably sufficient manner, and the limit of the company's liability to the amount insured on the item affected.

Many examples will occur to you where meticulous accuracy in reinstatement would be impossible, at any rate within the limit of the sum insured.

Company may take Possession (Condition 7) gives the company the right, on the happening of any damage in respect of which a claim is or may be made, to enter and take possession of the subject-matter of the policy in whole or in part, and to deal with it for all reasonable purposes and in any reasonable manner, and withholds from the insured the right to abandon any property to the company whether taken possession of by the company or not.

This appears to be a protective clause enabling the company, in the case of failure on the part of the owner, to take measures after the fire or other damage for the preservation of what remains.

It is frequently necessary immediately after the fire to secure or remove dangerous parts of a building, and a notice may be served by the local authority calling upon the owner to do what is necessary. In default the authority will sometimes undertake the work, in which case they have the right to recover the cost from the owner. It is to the advantage of the owner to have this work under rather than out of control, and this condition would enable the company to step in if the owner fails to comply with the notice, which frequently properly requires the work to be undertaken forthwith.

It may be that the company's surveyor has greater experience of such work. In some cases communication with the owner is not readily available ; other circumstances will occur to you rendering this condition of real value both to insured and insurer.

In any case these protective works are a first charge on the policy monies, and excessive expenditure in haste may be regretted later on.

In a sense this condition is somewhat analogous to that in leases giving the lessor the right to inspect, and, in case of failure by the lessee, to repair dilapidations which might otherwise tend towards destruction of the property.

It must not, however, be supposed that companies are in the habit of taking possession of the policy-holder's buildings after a fire. Just as the companies have the right to reinstate, so they have the right to take possession. I have taxed my memory but cannot think of a case where it became necessary for the company to take possession of a building.

Subrogation (Condition 9) applies in cases similar to that recently the subject of an action in the Courts where a house was burnt down in consequence, it was said, of the setting of a stove in adjoining premises in too close proximity to woodwork in the party-wall. Here the owner of the destroyed premises brought an action against his neighbour, and would, I think, have succeeded if his neighbour had not been able to satisfy the Court that all proper precautions were taken when the new stove was put in. In such cases the company has the right, at its own expense, to take action in the insured's name.

I was interested in a somewhat similar case where a large steam boiler of the Lancashire type was fixed in a confined space close to a party-wall. The boiler-setters, in order to obtain space for the lower part of their flue, cut deeply into the party-wall and inserted their fire-brick flue linings. Shortly afterwards the heat from this flue set fire to wood-work in the adjoining building. The resultant loss was recovered from the owners of the premises in which the boiler had been installed. Cases commonly occur in the country where thatched buildings are set on fire by sparks from traction-engines, and in these cases liability is sometimes fastened on the owner of the offending vehicle. The procedure in such cases is for the company to pay the loss and take subrogation of the assured's rights against the third party.

Arbitration Condition 11 is drawn, I think, mainly on the lines of the Arbitration Act, the provisions of which are probably more or less well known to most of us. But for this condition, differences generally involving technical matters more nearly related to ours than to the legal profession might become the subjects of actions at law which commercially minded people often consider expensive and unsatisfactory.

Arbitration is at least intended to bring about as speedy and satisfactory a resolution of the matters in difference as is humanly possible.

If I tell you that in forty odd years dealing with the assessment of fire losses on buildings of all kinds at home and abroad I have only once experienced arbitration in connection with a claim for a building loss, I think you will feel that further examination of this arbitration condition is hardly justified.

I may refer shortly to the circumstances of the case I have in mind—it happened a very long time ago: you may even feel that in that particular case arbitration was unavoidable.

Although the building was a large one and was totally destroyed, the company did not insist on the claimant supplying drawings and quantities. The amount claimed was arrived at by cubing the building. I feel sure all the detailed priced quantities I submitted to the claimant's professional representative were quite beyond his ken, but fortunately his client appointed a then well-known quantity surveyor to act as arbitrator, and when in the course of a few weeks his award was published, it was found to be for the total brought out at the foot of my summary.

Having briefly touched on the conditions governing the presentation and adjustment of claims, I have only to add that, if approached in the proper spirit, this part of your practice may be pleasant and not less enjoyable than other good work conscientiously carried out.

An example of a breezy friendly but, I suggest, unfortunate opening is “Ha! you are from the Insurance Company. How are you? Glad to see you. I suppose you are satisfied this is a total loss? I haven't seen the policy, but am told the amount insured is £——.” Followed perhaps, when particulars are suggested, by “Surely you don't want me to go into all that detail?” and complaints creating an unhappy atmosphere at the outset.

It is perfectly clear that the company is entitled to all reasonable evidence and, if necessary, proof. In the case of a small damage a builder's estimate is all that may be required; but where destruction is more extensive, drawings and quantities may be absolutely essential to show what actually existed prior to the fire, and if the building was old and dilapidated, it may be necessary to obtain evidence of the nature and extent of the dilapidations.

If the policy is in order and the amount insured sufficient, the satisfactory adjustment of a fire loss should be a very simple business. The fact that buildings are generally inadequately insured has often been stressed, and in such circumstances complete indemnity is clearly impossible except of course for partial loss.

I suggest, then, that, as soon as the opportunity offers, surveyors should endeavour to get their clients interested in their insurance policies. See that the description, occupation, construction, &c., is correctly described, warranties observed, and that the values insured are sufficient. I do not think many of us need have serious difficulty in estimating approximate values for insurance purposes. In cases where the premium is no more than 15s. for £1,000 insurance, no closer method of valuation than a cube is perhaps necessary, but in the case of a hazardous risk where the rate of premium is comparatively high, then the cost of a more detailed valuation clearly is justified and will pay the client.

A case I met in my own practice where the destruction was complete affords an example of how not to value for insurance purposes. The insurance was for £60,000, and the destruction being complete, a total loss was claimed. My client expressed surprise when I told him a satisfactory reinstatement could be carried out for £42,000, and reminded me that it was a hazardous risk carrying a high rate of premium and therefore unlikely to be over-insured. A cogent observation, but the undertaking of a leading firm of contractors to reinstate for the amount of my estimate satisfied the assured, and at that sum the loss was agreed.

The explanation only came to me months afterwards. The building was a city freehold, £60,000 had been lent upon it on mortgage, and that amount was adopted for insurance purposes. Had it been a short leasehold with a heavy ground rent, I suppose the mortgage might have been no more than £20,000, but hope the valuation for insurance purposes would have been more nearly related to the cost of construction.

EXTINGUISHING EXPENSES.

Among the matters I have not touched upon are fire brigade and similar charges incurred in extinguishing an outbreak. Although the marine insurance companies—and marine was, I think, the first of all forms of insurance—are not asked to contribute to the expenses incurred by Trinity House, and the several other authorities who afford means of protection for shipping, and it is not suggested that burglary insurance companies should be charged with any special liability for maintaining our police protection, there is among some members of the public a feeling abroad that the fire insurance companies should be charged with a part, if not the whole, cost of fire brigades.

This possibly arises from the practice, long since discontinued, of the more important companies maintaining their own fire brigades, and issuing to their assured a metal plate to be fixed on a prominent part of the building showing that it was insured with the . . . company.

Some of you may recall among the Whims and Oddities published by Thomas Hood in 1827 a humorous trifle called “Don’t you smell fire?” in which the work of these old companies’ brigades is put in the pillory:—

“The engines I hear them come rumbling;
There’s the ‘Phœnix,’ the ‘Globe,’ and the ‘Sun’;
What a row there will be and a grumbling
When the water don’t start for a run.”

Apparently even in those days over a century ago some local authorities recognised their liability to provide fire service, for the opening is—

“Run, run for St. Clement’s engine.”

It is an amusing description of fire fighting, and when finally instead of connecting their hose to a hydrant the firemen tapped the gas main, and the destruction was complete:—

“There! there! what a volley of flame,
And then suddenly all is obscured;
Well, I’m glad in my heart that I came,
But I hope the poor man is insured.”

You may find some amusement from taking down this old volume again.

Efficient fire fighting demands expensive machinery and appliances, experienced officers, well-trained men, and an abundant water supply readily accessible.

It is clear that in country districts lack of money, lack of practice and inadequate or inaccessible water supply sometimes result in poor service.

There is the case of the new motor-engine—taken into the centre of a stack-yard to deal with a farm fire—sunk in the mire and immovable: it was there destroyed by the fire it essayed to extinguish. An old steam fire-engine proceeding to a stack fire some distance out of town and working up its steam pressure on the way threw out quantities of sparks and set light to other stacks standing in fields near the road, so that before it had dealt with the fire it set out to extinguish it was called to others which it had inadvertently originated.

One could, of course, quote many cases where in the excitement of the moment lack of experience of how best to make use of the means available has led to more or less serious disaster.

The Royal Commission on Fire Brigades and Fire Prevention (whose report was published in 1923) examined a number of witnesses representing rural and urban district councils, municipal corporations, &c., and reported: "We have given much thought to this fundamental question of fire-brigade organisation, and after careful consideration of all the circumstances, and giving due weight to the evidence tendered on behalf of the local authorities of the country, we recommend that it should be made a statutory duty on the authorities (i.e., corporations, urban and rural district councils, &c.) as fire-brigade authorities to maintain or to co-operate in maintaining a fire service."

London and other large cities have outstandingly efficient brigades and equipment, and that of many of the smaller towns is being steadily improved, but there are still considerable districts where what the Royal Commission thought should be a statutory duty is but imperfectly performed, and that not only where, as the Commission foresaw, "owing to the sparseness of the population, absence of water, &c.," exemption should be granted.

Official organisations supported by the rates are not entitled to charge for their services within the ratable area, and what are called "volunteer brigades" are not, strictly speaking, entitled to make any charges.

SALVAGE EXPENSES.

Trained salvage corps are maintained by the Insurance Companies in London, Liverpool, and Glasgow, and valuable service is rendered in the direction of protective works undertaken during and immediately after the fire, but, as was clearly observed and noted by the Commission, we have each of us a communal and doubtless also a personal duty to protect our own property.

Outstanding service of this nature on the part of individuals is sometimes recognised by the companies, but it cannot be too clearly understood that the liability under a fire policy is for loss or damage to the property insured.

CONCLUSION.

The companies are keenly anxious that full advantage should be taken of the protection they are able to offer. To this end their vast accumulation of knowledge of the way in which your difficulty may be solved and your clients' wishes may be most economically and comprehensively met is always at your service. Whenever doubt or difficulty presents itself to you, your insurance company's appropriate official should be your best adviser. Get in touch with him; he is anxious to afford you this service, and your clients this protection.

A distinguished foreigner speaking recently at the London Insurance Institute said that "the companies were the “ vendors of confidence, and that they must always and “ everywhere be on the side of those who fought for the “ preservation of confidence, of faith and of loyalty in “ private life and especially in public life.”

“ They belonged as a whole to the strongest financial “ bodies of the world, and by concentrating their forces
“ they could, perhaps, more successfully than other institu“ tions, serve their own interest and, at the same time,
“ the interest of the community. They lived with faithful“ ness, stability and self-respect, or died with the opposite.
“ That was what the public appeared to realise even better “ than the companies themselves, and it was one argument
“ more why millions of people felt safe and sound through “ insurance protection.”

The SECRETARY introduced to the meeting M. James Lukats, Lecturer in Land Surveying at the Tallinn University, Estonia, and representing on that evening the countries of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. He was visiting Great Britain and Canada to study British methods of land surveying and mapping. M. Lukats had asked to be given the opportunity of meeting a representative body of chartered surveyors so that he might offer to them the cordial greetings of the three countries which he represented.

M. LUKATS (Visitor), who on rising was given a cordial reception by the members, said he was very honoured and proud to be invited to meet the members of the most important association of the profession in the world.

He came from the small European Continental country of Estonia, and represented the Land Surveyors, Geodesists, Geographers and Technologists of three nations Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania ; and was very happy to deliver to The Institution and its members congratulations and greetings from his Estonian, Latvian and Lithuanian colleagues.

He represented the six following Societies: The Society of Estonian Land Surveyors, the Association of Estonian Geodesists, the Union of Latvian Land Surveyors, the Society of Latvian Land Surveyors, the Society of Latvian Licensed Surveyors, and the Union of Land Surveyors and Amelioration Technologists of Lithuania. These countries have 1,300 surveyors in all, representing the various branches of the surveying profession—400 of which were in Estonia, 600 in Latvia, and 300 in Lithuania. Compared with The Chartered Surveyors' Institution it was not a large body, but in his opinion not only were the great wheels useful in a good machine but the small screws also.

Before the Russian Revolution the provinces of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania had been incorporated in the Russian Empire, but these three nations had always preserved their languages, customs and high culture, which had developed since they had attained their independence. The most educated people in Russia before the Great War had been in the province of Estland, now known as Estonia. All their technically educated men had been spread over the whole of Russia, and many Estonians, Latvians and Lithuanians occupied high Government positions. There had been between 800 and 1,000 land surveyors in Russia who came from these provinces.

When the three independent republics had been formed, the surveyors of these nations, as the patriots of their countries, had returned to their own republics.

In the earlier years of the republics, when the Cadastral-Land Valuation and Land Reform had begun, and the large estates of the barons and landlords had been appropriated by the Government and divided into small lots and given up to farm labourers, all the land surveyors had found their own specialised work. Three years ago the Cadastral-Land Valuation in Estonia had been completed. Now the Land Reform would be ended in the autumn of the present year, and in Estonia from the next year onwards there would be employment for only 50 or 60 land surveyors, and the remainder would be forced to change their profession, or to find employment abroad.

The position in Latvia and Lithuania was very similar to that of Estonia, but Latvia had sufficient employment for another three years or more, and Lithuania for another eight years or so.

The surveyors in Estonia were eager to reorganise all surveyors' work, and to begin the geodetic and geographic survey, so as to give employment to some of their surveyors. For the others they were seeking employment in the overseas countries and colonies.

He trusted that his mission was quite clear to the members. He had been delegated by the Land Surveyors' Societies of the three nations to study survey, geodetic, mapping, &c., methods and systems in England, Canada, and America, for instructing their surveyors in the use of these methods in their countries, and on the other hand to seek employment or contracting survey work in overseas lands and colonies of Great Britain.

The first step of his mission was to apply to the members, his brothers in the profession in Great Britain, to give their hand in assistance to his colleagues in Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania. The members' kind assistance would be greatly appreciated by surveyors of those three nations.

In conclusion he wished The Institution to accept the most cordial greetings from his colleagues in the Societies he represented.

The PRESIDENT said he would like to add that M. Lukats had given a wonderful address at the last International Conference of Surveyors at Zurich on the subject of British surveyors, which showed what affection he had for the British surveyor. On behalf of The Institution he thanked M. Lukats for the friendly message which he had brought from his colleagues in Estonia.

A DISCUSSION took place on Mr. J. McMULLEN BROOKS' Paper entitled

incident thereto and the Adjustment of Losses by Fire thereon.

Mr. J. McMULLEN BROOKS (Messrs. Howell & Brooks, 4, Queen Victoria Street, E.C.) (Chartered Surveyor), in the course of his short précis introducing the Paper, said that the figures mentioned under the heading "Progress," on page 187, five, fourteen and three-quarters and forty millions sterling of premium income from fire underwriting were those of a short but select list of what he had called the great leading companies.

That with regard to the Chartered Insurance Institute he hoped the meeting might prove the inception of an entente between two bodies that could certainly be of considerable service one to the other, meaning, of course, The Chartered Surveyors' Institution and the Chartered Insurance Institute.

Under the heading "Explosion," page 193, he gave some particulars of explosions at Gateshead and Mitcham which had occurred since the Paper was printed.

Under the heading "Accidents to Third Parties," page 197, he said he ought to have made it clear that, in addition to the old form of public liability policy, the companies now issue a property-owner's liability policy—examples of proposal forms and policies for both these classes of insurance being included in his Exhibit "F.F.," and that he had included with his Exhibit "F. 1" (boiler insurance policies) an example of a policy applicable to a baker's steam tube oven. He added that a large number of engineering risks, to some of which the building owner may be subject, may now be covered by insurance.

As to rebates in premium for construction and appliances, page 207, he pointed out that in the case of one building containing factory, warehouse and offices the premium would probably be much reduced if the building were so divided that the varying risks were in separate fire-resisting compartments.

Under the heading, "Sprinkler Installation," he uttered a warning against the pipes being embedded in concrete floors as involving difficulty if and when alterations are desired. From what Mr. Gleed said during the discussion, it appeared that clients of his had met this difficulty.

Mr. BROOKS acknowledged the kindness of friends of his in the insurance world who had supplied him with the proposal, policy forms, &c., referred to in his Paper as exhibits. He has since obtained their consent to these exhibits remaining permanently in the Library for reference by members who might be interested in any of the several forms of insurance dealt with in the Paper.

As a reminder of the infinitesimal cost at which insurance protection might be obtained, there were in the Paper quotations of normal or minimum rates of premium.

In one case, under the heading "Impact," earthquake should be omitted from the list of hazards which could be covered for a premium of 9*d.* per cent.

Two printer's errors required correction. Under the heading of "Average," second paragraph, page 203, in the Transactions, "partial insurer" should read "partial insured," and under the heading "Rebates in Premium, &c.," paragraph 3, page 207, in the Transactions, a similar correction is required, "the different standards of construction entitle the 'insured,' not the 'insurer,' to varying concessions."

Mr. BROOKS said that he had avoided reference to legal decisions because they were all available to members in The Institution Library, and, so far as his experience went, members would but seldom have occasion to refer to them.

Many of the cases quoted in the "Standard Works on the Law of Fire Insurance" afforded valuable guidance, but some of them were old, and it was not always easy to apply them to the circumstances of the particular case one was handling. In a case he had had recently, learned Counsel advised that on the decisions the assured was clearly entitled to recover part of his loss twice over; after consideration, including consultation with other learned Counsel, it was decided not to contest the point. The decisions appeared to contravene the principle of indemnity that was generally accepted as being at the root of the matter.

Mr. C. HERBERT BEDELLS (Past-President), in proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Brooks, said that the explosions to which the author had referred had caused a good deal of inquiry and some trepidation in the minds of those who were interested in the management of property as to how far their insurance policies covered the results of underground explosion, or the travelling underground of inflammable gases.

It was a good thing that, from time to time, members should be able to refresh their knowledge of professional subjects, and they were much indebted to the author for having prepared the lengthy Paper which he had submitted that night. He was sure it had raised in their minds many problems to which it was important that they should find a solution.

The author had stated that many of the doubts which had been expressed at the time of the reading of his (Mr. Bedells') Paper had now been cleared away. Personally he fancied that, although solutions of many of those questions had been arrived at, it had been rather by way of practice and procedure than by any definite legal decisions. The author would correct him if he were wrong, but he thought that since 1902 there had been very few reported cases which had altered to any material extent the basis of the legal liability which was defined in the 1902 Paper ; he could refer to only one or two of them now.

Take, for instance, insurance of fees: the proportion of insurance policies which definitely, on the face of them, included a provision for professional fees incident to reinstatement was altogether different from what it had been thirty years ago. Then there had been almost a doubt whether one could insure fees. It was now a very common thing indeed to insure them specifically. He was glad, however, to see that the author, in the part of his Paper in which he touched upon the point, suggested that even although there was now the opportunity of covering those fees, it did not follow that if fees were not specified by the wording of the policy, nevertheless, if the sum insured was adequate, the normal expenses incident to reinstatement would not as a rule be objected to by the insuring company. Personally he thought that was perfectly right. There had always been the qualification that no expenses incident to the claim itself were recoverable. It might be argued that it would be one-sided if they were allowed to one party only, but in certain circumstances it was, he thought, still a hardship, so far as the insured was concerned, not to be allowed to recover the expenses incident to preparation of the particulars of damage. The preparation of detailed particulars which the companies themselves would use to reinstate cost a considerable sum of money, and it seemed to him that was definitely a legitimate part of cost of reinstatement and ought to be paid as part of the " loss." Notices under the 1774 Act arose because of different interests, and the whole subject of limited interests was one which he hoped would be dealt with in the discussion that night.

A second question which had been doubtful in 1902 was whether an adequate insurance covered cost of reinstatement in compliance with the bye-laws and Building Acts. As the members had seen in the Paper and in the exhibits, it was now possible to insure the extra cost so arising "if the requirements were not enforced in respect of the property prior to destruction."

Various forms of words were used in the various companies' policies thus qualifying this particular item. He thought it was intended to discriminate against notices which had already been given. If notice had already been given by an authority to make alterations to premises, and a fire took place, then the requisition was not caused by the fire, and a claim in respect thereof could not be made.

In view of the fact that it was now possible to cover these extra risks, was it necessary to do so? On page 200 the author in effect said "Yes," because he said it was clear that those requirements were not per se covered by the insurance. If the insurance was adequate it seemed to him inequitable that the indemnity principle should not provide for the necessary expense incident to reinstatement. But assuming that the view expressed by the author was correct, how far would the cover under a special item extend? Would it extend to cover loss of value? Supposing, for example, additional staircases to provide exits in case of fire reduced the superficial area of the floor space of the building, was that covered by a special insurance? He asked the question in view of a case, which no doubt the author would remember, relating to an Elizabethan manor-house which contained panelling and other period characteristics. That panelling and those characteristics could be reproduced and reinstated, but the building resulting would be different. The original manor-house owed its value to the genuineness of its equipment, whereas the reinstated building would be just a house with a certain amount of panelling, &c. In that case the Court held, unless he had misread the case, that something had to be added—not only the costs of reinstating the particular property, but to make good to the assured the loss which he had sustained by having to accept a new building instead of an old one. Did not that decision, by analogy, apply to the problem presented by a reinstated building lessened in value because in order to fulfil current requirements of the authorities the available floor space had been reduced?

Arising out of that, in 1902 the question of supplemental claims had been raised, but not adequately discussed. It must be within the experience of many of the members dealing with reinstatements in London that the requirements of district surveyors could not be ascertained except provisionally. One was therefore in a dilemma ; either one must take the risk of claiming for less than one might have to perform, or one must claim more than one really did expect to have to pay for in reinstatement. There ought to be possibility of adjustment in a case like that. If the insurance company were themselves reinstating, any such extra demands would become necessarily a part of the duty imposed upon them. Therefore it did not seem unreasonable that a settlement with an assessor for the fire office should provide for a supplemental allowance in circumstances calling for it.

The author said that he (Mr. Bedells) was “ on the side “ of the angels,” and that he (the author) was on the side of others not so described. He was glad the author had himself said that, because members would notice that, in certain matters, the author did frankly adopt the views of the insurers rather than perhaps the views of the insured. The author remarked that the reductions made since 1902 in premium rates were most liberal, and quoted the fact that profits were only 3 and 4 per cent. on premium income. If the percentage were related to the profits on the capital, called and uncalled, members might have come to a somewhat different conclusion.

Then the author said, with regard to “ average,” that as yet "average" as applied to buildings was by no means universal. Personally he thought that the application of "average" to insurances on buildings, except where constituting a special risk, was the exception rather than the rule.

He wished the author had said more upon the question of "value" and how it should be arrived at. Take, for instance, a comprehensive policy. How was the value to be arrived at of the total subject-matter of the insurance in one's house? What was it to be based on—the selling value of the articles, or what it would cost to reproduce them? And, particularly, when one had to take out a policy which was to be subject to average, how did one arrive at the value which would have to be, in case of a fire, the touchstone as to whether one would be indemnified or not? If the author would state what quick methods he adopted in order to arrive at "value," when a "cube" estimate was not near enough and the cost of priced quantities prohibitive, he would be doing a great service to the members.

There was just one question he wanted to ask with regard to third-party liability. He would give an actual case. He had doubted the stability of a jobbing builder to whom he was entrusting certain repairs and painting, and had, therefore, insisted upon the builder producing to him a policy of insurance to show that he was properly covered against third-party risks as well as employer's liability. It turned out that the builder was not so insured, but ultimately he produced a policy. When he (Mr. Bedells) had looked at the wording of the policy he had found that it was an indemnification against liability "other than liability" assumed by the insured under any contract or agreement "to indemnify." That had been exactly the liability he had wanted the builder to cover; the liability which arose out of the contract which he had been going to enter into. He had put his objection to the insurance company, and they had replied in effect "Those are the words of our policy; we are sorry, but we cannot alter them." That did not seem to him to be quite a reasonable attitude to take up, but he should like to know what meaning the author attached to that qualification.

He thought he had said quite enough to carry the members with him in according to Mr. Brooks a very hearty vote of thanks for the Paper he had written. The Paper, however, would be difficult to construe in future unless he also left with The Institution the "exhibits" which he had put on the table for the members' inspection; and if the author would, in addition to that, add a few notes as to premium rates, it would greatly add to the value of his Paper. For instance, in one of the exhibits there were four rates for buildings, according to class of construction, defined, but there was no indication as to the maximum or the minimum of the rates applying to those classes. He thought that in the future the principle of grading buildings according to their construction as affecting the operation of building Acts and bye-laws would be adopted, and when that came about, he thought, there might be fruitful collaboration between The Chartered Surveyors' Institution and the Institution of which the author had spoken.

He begged to move the vote of thanks.

Mr. F. E. EILOART (Chartered Surveyor) said it gave him great pleasure to second the vote of thanks to the author for his very comprehensive Paper. Some fifty or sixty years ago he had had the privilege of knowing the author's father at the zenith of his profession, and he had been very kind to him as a young man in helping him in making decisions which he had had to make on behalf of offices. Mr. Brooks' father had always been pleased and willing to put his vast experience, which he had gained by acting for the Norwich Union, at the disposal of any of his fellow surveyors. He thought the members were all glad that Mr. Brooks' father had passed that trait down to the next generation. The very valuable Paper which they had heard that night was sufficient to guarantee that that was so.

There was one thing which the author had mentioned in his Paper which appealed to him very strongly, namely, the meeting between the assessor and assured.

In acting for an office an assessor had to have a smattering of the value—or a very hazy idea of the value—of everything that was on the face of the earth ; but it was a very superficial value. What was really valuable to an assessor and to his clients was that he should know where it was a case in which he should call in expert advice. As far as value went he thought that was all an assessor required.

But there was another thing which was equally as important to an assessor, and that was a knowledge of human nature. An assessor got sent out into the world in order to assess losses. He was here, there and everywhere doing that all day long. It was part of his life. He then had to meet the assured who had just suffered the loss, which was a distinct event in his life, and who was possibly in a highly-strung condition. It was very difficult to get such person to realise that the assessor had been instructed to get at the true facts of the case, the amount of the loss, the indemnity due under the policy and nothing more. Very often one found that the insured looked upon the assessor first of all as a man who was out to catch him tripping and to see how he could get the best settlement for his office. It was then that a knowledge of human nature was of inestimable value to the assessor to enable him to overcome that very strained position. If the assessor once got the confidence of the assured and convinced him that his (the assessor's duty) was not simply to knock something off the claim but to arrive at a fair sum to indemnify him for his loss, then half the battle was won.

Looking round the hall he was sure there were many gentlemen present who had technical posers to put to the author, and, therefore, he would not take up any further time, but merely second with the greatest pleasure the vote of thanks to the author for his Paper, and leave the author to answer the questions which he was sure were going to give him some thought.

Mr. E. F. WILLIAMSON (Past-President of the Chartered Insurance Institute) (Visitor) said that the Paper put before the members an admirable synopsis of the practice of insurance companies with regard to building insurances. He was closely in touch with the modern developments of insurance because he had gone into the business at a time when those developments were beginning. He could remember the time when people used to ask for some extraneous cover other than fire or lightning, and when his company had always made the stereotyped reply, namely, "We regret to say that we are not permitted by our deed of settlement to transact this class of business," and that was an all-sufficient answer which had been accepted by their agents and by the assured without demur.

In recent years, however, their contracts had become enormously complicated. They had, he felt, endeavoured to progress with the times and to implement indemnity in almost every possible form. He supposed that a rough-and-ready definition of "insurable interest" would be that any one who was liable to suffer by some peril any loss, which could be measured in money, had an insurable interest. A comparatively few years ago those perils, so far as insurance was concerned, were few in number. Now their number was legion. That demand had probably been created, to a large extent, by the involved financial interests which went to make up the business of to-day. There were multiple interests, and those multiple interests desired to see their capital protected in every possible form. But there was also, so far as the insurance companies were concerned, this aspect—that there was also a class of the public who desired to have monetary indemnity for every possible casualty which might occur and who desired to be freed from responsibility. That was not to the good.

Mr. Brooks' Paper would be a great addition to the records of The Institution; and in reading it he had been reminded of the fact that he had always regarded the family of Brooks as a particularly able one. He had, as a junior clerk, known the author's father, and he had known the author for a great number of years. He was very grateful for their ability and for the outstanding services, as he had seen them in later years, which they had rendered to his company ; but he saw considerable evidence of their ability in the present Paper, and not only in the way in which the members saw it, and he himself also saw it, but in another way which perhaps the members did not see, and that was in the freedom with which Mr. Brooks had given information about his (Mr. Williamson's) business. There were twenty-four pages of the Paper dealing with the insurance companies' side of the business, and twelve pages of it dealing with the assessors' side of the business. It might be said that that was a relative position of two to one, but if they looked a little more closely into it, they would see, he thought, that it was very much nearer twenty to one. He regarded that as extremely clever of the author. The author had told them all about insurance from the companies' stand-point, and he had told them quite enough about the assessor's stand-point, because he had felt sure that, in their professional capacity, they would not need teaching on that side of the business.

He would like to take up a point which the proposer of the vote of thanks had made. Mr. Bedells seemed to regard it as wrong to state the profits of an insurance company in relation to the premium income, and he had said that he would like to see it stated in relation to the capital. He felt he must put that right. He would say unhesitatingly that the great majority of British insurance companies were only making a small margin on their premium income, but that was not insurance. Insurance was the building up of a fund which would be safe, and able to take care of the enormous risks which insurance companies had to take. The measure of those risks was primarily related to their premium income, and they had to make a profit out of their premium income which would be sufficient to give a return to their shareholders and—(and this was what very few of them were doing to-day)—make an addition to their funds in respect of the enormous liabilities which, in spite of diminishing premium income, were probably increasing because of the lowering of the rate of premium which was obtainable.

There was one other point, and that was with regard to arriving at value. That certainly was a complicated matter, and the business of chartered surveyors rather than of the manager of an insurance company ; but he would like to state the following. The person he had in mind was a reputable surveyor in a good-class business, whom he knew sometimes acted both for insurance companies and for assured in connection with claims—small claims it was true. A friend of his had recently died, and he happened to be his executor. His friend had lived in a moderate-sized suburban house worth £2,000, and it was valued for probate at £2,000. He wondered what the members thought would be the valuation placed by the surveyor for probate purposes on the contents of that house. Personally he had known the house for many years. It was reasonably well furnished but not expensively so, and the furniture was insured for £800. It had been very extraordinary to him, used as he was to seeing valuations from another standpoint, to find that the valuation for probate purposes was £173 5s.

In the latter part of the Paper the author referred to policy conditions, and one condition—the arbitration condition—naturally had his attention. He did not wish to do away with the arbitration clause, but he had been led to the conclusion that the arbitration clause was intended to be a method by which a perfectly honest dispute between two people, whose bonâ fides were not challenged, could be settled easily and simply. Those disputes would arise. They seldom got to arbitration because the companies managed to settle them by negotiation. However, there were cases which did get to arbitration where there was just an honest difference of opinion with regard to value ; and that difference could be settled by arbitration. But what did one find?—that very often at the back of the dispute was definite fraud, and he was led to be doubtful whether arbitration was a suitable method of settling a claim when there was fraud at the back of it. There was a lack of publicity. The fraudulent person escaped from the position of having to face another tribunal if he was found to have committed that fraud.

He very much appreciated the honour which The Institution had conferred upon him in allowing him to be present that evening, and to pay his tribute to his old friend Mr. Brooks for the Paper he had read.

Mr. P. F. GLEED (Chartered Surveyor) said that he spoke as a chartered quantity surveyor, and, therefore, perhaps, with some knowledge of brick and mortar value of buildings, which value, when it came to a question of reinstatement, was that at which one wanted to arrive. He was not suggesting for a moment that only a chartered quantity surveyor could speak on brick and mortar values ; but he was glad to see that the author had said that the work was of such importance that a quantity surveyor might with advantage be consulted.

He desired to express his appreciation of the Paper, especially at the clearness of its wording and its detailed arrangement, which made it a model for all such types of Papers.

There were two ways, especially, in which a quantity surveyor might be employed. A client often insured a building and had no real idea of what that building had cost. He might take as a guide what he had paid for it ; that had no connection whatever with the brick and mortar value. One might, for example, buy a country house for £2,000 which would cost one £20,000 to build, and unfortunately that was becoming more possible every day. Therefore he thought it was proper to advise a building owner to have a brick and mortar valuation of his property made. In the course of making the valuation the surveyor would form a good specification of the constructional and decorative work. Such a document could not fail to be useful should a fire occur and an assessment of the loss have to be made.

Secondly, one was often approached by an assessor to make a valuation of the loss due to fire. When that gentleman was found with a difficult problem to do with building, he went to a man who knew about building and handed over the problem to him. When the difficult task was satisfactorily completed, the building man was addressed by the assessor as follows: "Well, you know, you must not charge too much for this, because I have got to put something on it, and the charges must not look too heavy." Having no knowledge of quantities the assessor was unaware of what it had cost one to make a report.

With regard to the prevention of fire and the effect of fire-resisting precautions on premiums, he considered that recently there had been cases of holding too rigidly to inflexible rules. Especially was that the case in regard to a sprinkler installation. A building owner spent a lot of money on sprinkler installations—it might be in a new building. The building was let, and the tenant put up various partitions. Then the inspector of the insurance company came round and said: "I can make no allowance for that. That partition is six inches the wrong way. There can be no rebate on that at all." That was not reasonable. Even if the company could not give the whole rebate they should give as big a percentage of the rebate as possible; but they should not ignore the value of the whole of the fire-resisting precautions because of a small deviation from the rules. A building owner could not go to his tenant and tell him he had got to shift his partition this way or that way. Those were circumstances which the owner could not reasonably control; he could only control them by refusing to have the tenant. Such cases did arise, and he thought that the owner was entitled at least to sympathetic consideration.

Lastly, in certain restricted areas modern buildings went up, and the authorities rightly insisted upon them being made as fire-resisting as possible at great cost. In some cases every window had fire-resisting glass, and sprinklers were installed in addition to the ordinary fire-resisting construction of the building, but because the buildings were in a certain restricted area, and the other buildings round were not so modern, the building owner was mulcted in a very high percentage for insurance. He would like to know if there were any means of getting over that, as it did not seem to be quite a just way of dealing with the matter.

Mr. G. H. LOVEGROVE (Chartered Surveyor) said it was a peculiar pleasure to him to speak that evening because thirty years ago his father had joined in the discussion on Mr. Bedells' Paper.

When he had read the present Paper he had got into a tremendous state of excitement over the policy issued on his own private house, as the author had said they were all standard policies to which he referred. He had looked up his own policy, which appeared to be an ordinary standard policy, and he had found that nearly all, if not all, the "exceptions" were covered. He was wondering whether the author's policies referred to the usual companies. His own policy certainly covered all the exceptions.

In the course of a few years' practice one had many experiences, especially if one was practising in a district which was prone to fire. Among them were those which Mr. Gleed had mentioned, namely, the location of the building. It had always seemed extraordinary to a man, when he was building, to have his factory building assessed at a very much higher rate if he was on one side of the street than on the other however careful he was to make it fire-resisting, and that if when he had started building he had chosen his site a few yards distant he might have saved himself quite a substantial annual sum.

Then there was the question of rates and of electrical wiring. One got no rebate if one rewired a building in steel-casing in place of the old system of wiring in wooden casing which might be worn out. There was no difference in the rate, and yet the difference in the risk must be enormous.

Then there was the question of loss of rent. If only a small part of a building was burnt out one might get only a small part of the loss of rent sustained thereby, yet that part of the building might be the most important part of the house—for instance, the kitchen, which would render the house uninhabitable ; and yet from the insurance company's point of view the house would be only slightly damaged. He had provided for this in his own policy.

Another point was garden fences. Those, in his experience, were never covered by a policy, although one was not told in taking out a policy that that was not so. One naturally thought that when the building was covered it included the surroundings on the estate, but during the air raids many losses were made by his clients.

He had read the exhibits in the Library, and he had been very much struck by Exhibit J as to the improvements required after a fire. He thought the insurance companies, particularly in the commercial districts of London, should notify their policy-holders that it was possible to insure against possible improvements required by the authorities. Or was it possible, taking Mr. Bedells' remarks, that if an owner had a wooden building he could insure for rebuilding in brick, for under a normal policy he would be told after a fire that as the building was in wood he could only claim for wood? The point should be cleared up. Personally it had never occurred to him that one could insure for something which one did not possess except by a special policy from Lloyds.

That led him to the most important note he had made, namely, as to the amount for which one should insure. How was one to estimate what a building was worth as the risk against fire? Should the walls of a basement which were not likely to be damaged be included in the valuation? When one was working out the estimated value of the risk, should one measure down to the pavement level or right down to the basement level? And, if so, what about the foundations? They might have to be rebuilt, or the walls might have to be thickened.

There was another point—the cost of reinstatement of a part would certainly be far greater than the original cost of building. Whenever one made a small addition to a building people said “ Why, you could have built a house for “ that money.” One might have a house for which one had paid £2,000, and £1,500 would be the cost of reinstating the results of a very small fire. Even in the event of a total loss one could not possibly rebuild that house for £2,000, particularly if it had originally been a “ mass production ” house.

Those were points which he wished the author had mentioned.

It had always seemed to him that professional fees formed part of the cost of reinstatement as much as the builder's estimator's salary when submitting his tender. He knew it was usual not to allow them, and he advised his clients to have a separate item in the schedule to cover them ; but, even so, the author stated that it was impossible to insure for the cost of making a claim. Personally he thought that should be possible. He did not know whether, if one went to Lloyds, one could get a policy to cover that, but the ordinary company would not give one ; and it seemed to him that professional fees for reinstatement should be part of the cost of reinstatement and that the insured should be able to feel that he was fully covered from all loss in the event of a fire.

Mr. GEOFFREY L. VIGERS (Member of Council) remarked that he was not an expert on the question of insurance. He had come to thank the author for the Paper he had read that night. Mr. Brooks was one of those people to whom Mr. Eiloart had referred—who got down to personality. He was one of those people of whom one had heard before—a gentleman who whistled the bird off the tree, and in his capacity of whistling the bird off the tree he had very successfully looked after the interests of the Norwich Union and the other companies which he represented.

He felt that Mr. Eiloart was right in saying that if the two parties could get down to seeing each other's point of view in trying to arrive at a settlement a stage would always be reached where it should not be necessary to go to arbitration, and that there should never be any difficulty, between members of The Institution, in reaching a settlement which was fair and just to those interested in the particular insurance policy.

He had been particularly interested to hear that amongst the author's exhibits there were certain documents which he had obtained from the insurance company and that he had got an explanation of them. Personally he was glad to think the author had had insurance company's documents explained to him, because personally he was quite unable to follow some of the documents which were connected with insurance. He had been appalled when he had read the Paper to think of what might not be included in his policy, and all the risks which involved the payment of an additional premium. He had always been told that, whatever premiums one paid, the thing that one lost was the thing that was not covered by the particular policy by which one was insured. He had always been told, too, that the whole principle of an insurance company was to indemnify against what one lost, and then, when they had indemnified one against what one had lost, they had done all they could do.

He sympathised entirely with Mr. Bedells' remarks with regard to surveyors' fees. The companies said "Oh, we "are only going to indemnify you against what you have "lost," but they did not pay the fees, which was part of the cost which one incurred in reinstating the loss which one had suffered, unless that was specified. He had always thought that fees were part of the loss and should be included.

He agreed there were things for which one could insure specially. In his office in the City they insured specially against the risk of having to put a fire-proof staircase in if the house was destroyed. In all the other houses in the court in which his office was situated there were no proper fire-proof staircases. He had realised that if they were destroyed by fire the London County Council would probably insist upon fire-proof staircases, and his firm insured specially against the risk. That was something which he supposed would not be found in many policies.

He wished to thank Mr. Brooks for his Paper, and hoped that if ever he had a fire he would at least be indemnified against what he had lost, and that if he had the misfortune to have his motor-car stolen that he would not be offered about 25 per cent. of what it had cost him.

The PRESIDENT, in putting the vote of thanks to the meeting, said he had just picked up the "Journal" of thirty years ago which included Mr. Bedells' Paper on the same subject, and from reading the President's summing-up it appeared that the chief complaint in those days had been the following: that the insurance companies had a splendid reputation for paying fair sums upon the occurrence of a fire; but they had adopted this position: they drew up the policy, mostly in very small print apparently, and when one had a fire and read the small print for the first time, one found that one was owed nothing in law. The conditions of the policy were stringent, and the insurance companies appeared to have preserved themselves from paying anything under any circumstances. Nevertheless, when one had a fire they had a splendid reputation for paying up fairly. The complaint at that time had been that the wording of the policies was very bad indeed, and therefore there was a need for great improvement in the conditions of the policies; but the insurance companies then had, as they had now, a splendid reputation for doing the right thing. But they had a very bad reputation for the legal wording of their policies, and it appeared to him that it was the competition amongst insurance companies which had changed that. If one read the policies now, one would generally find that one got what one was entitled to when one had a fire. In the old days one was not entitled to it, but did get it. That was the result of competition.

Mr. Bedells' Paper occupied thirty-eight pages apart from the discussion, which was a little more than Mr. Brook's. That would show to Mr. Williamson that there had been considerable indignation as to the wording of policies of those days.

It gave him the greatest possible pleasure to put the vote of thanks to Mr. Brooks. The members would agree with him that Mr. Brooks' valuable Paper would form a most interesting addition to The Institution's Transactions, and enable them to look up from time to time what they ought to do when they were called in to fire cases.

The motion was carried by acclamation.

Mr. J. McMULLEN BROOKS (Chartered Surveyor), in reply, expressed his sincere thanks for the kindly manner in which his Paper had been received. He said it was clearly impossible at that late hour to deal with the many interesting queries raised, but that he would endeavour to do so through the "Journal."

The following written communication has been received from Mr. H. COLIN ALLEN (Professional Associate):—

This Paper touches upon an important subject in the practice of many surveyors, and I desire to join in the thanks to the author.

Although not acting as an agent of any insurance office I have had to review many insurance policies, and find that it is often necessary to obtain a copy of the form of proposal in order with the policy to decide upon the indemnity subsisting. On several occasions it is found that some portions of a property have been inadvertently omitted, and that the interests of all concerned parties have not been shown.

In the case of a leasehold property this might give rise to an action for forfeiture, and similarly of the cover being for an insufficient amount.

Will the author kindly advise of the method of covering the additional costs of making good a property damaged or destroyed by fire, &c., risks, when—in rebuilding—additional requirements have to be complied with as to thicker walls, &c.?

I venture to disagree with the suggestions of the author regarding the insertion of priced items to cover “ architect’s “ and surveyor’s fees,” as I would object to the insertion of an item for “ water supply during building operations.” This class of specified amount appears to me to be against the interests of the assured by hypothecating a sum to what is, after all, but a part of the legitimate and reasonable costs of rebuilding the property.

The “ contribution ” clause mentioned by Mr. Brooks on page 191, in the cases of mortgagees, should be the subject of a special clause in the mortgage deed, in view of the case Halifax Building Society v. Keighley and Another. In this case it appeared that when the loss occurred there were several policies in force, but in only one of which was mentioned the interest of the mortgagees, and an apportionment of the total indemnity paid out by the several insurance offices found the mortgagees receiving less than the indemnity in that policy, and also less than the amount of their loan. Similar cases can be guarded against by the insertion in the mortgage deed of a clause requiring all monies from the insurances, whether effected independently of the mortgagees or not, to be held by the mortgagor in trust for the mortgagees.

Mr. BROOKS has written as follows:—

I agree with Mr. Bedells that it has been rather by practice and procedure than by any definite legal decisions that the difficulties raised in his Paper of 1902 have been disposed of. I believe that the training of a surveyor might be of more value in these matters than that of a lawyer.

The companies are unwilling to admit the cost of preparing particulars of claim as part of the loss, but I have little doubt that in the case cited by Mr. Bedells where the company was called upon to reinstate under the 1774 Act they would, provided the amount of the insurance was sufficient, be willing to pay the cost of preparing such drawings and quantities as would enable them to undertake the reinstatement.

I have looked through what Mr. Bedells called the various phraseologies adopted in the companies' policies insuring cost of improvements or alterations to comply with requirements of the local authorities. It seems to me that these were all practically identical, and make it clear that in the event of the building being damaged to an extent necessitating alterations and improvements to conform with requirements, the liability would extend to cover the cost of such alterations and improvements, the only limitation being that the total liability should not exceed the amount insured on each building. Without this endorsement the policy would not extend to cover improvements. In neither case would it extend to cover loss of value owing to reduced floor space, nor would credit be taken for the increased value of the property attributable to these improvements having been carried out at the cost of the company.

I think the question as to whether "the antique value" of the Elizabethan manor-house, referred to by Mr. Bedells, is covered by the policy is answered by Condition 6. It says that the company shall not be bound to reinstate exactly or completely but only as circumstances permit and in a reasonably sufficient manner, and shall not in any case be bound to expend in respect of any one of the articles insured more than the sum insured thereon. The difficulty raised, however, is theoretical rather than actual, because to-day's value of the manor-house in the market for sale would probably be less than the cost of erecting a modern house of similar size.

Supplemental claims seldom arise, but when they do are given reasonable consideration.

I have frequently met the difficulty with the district surveyor referred to, but think that although he may be unwilling to commit himself, men of experience are generally able to form a shrewd notion of what he will require.

The amount of premium collected is the measure of potential loss in which the companies may be involved, and on the basis of this annual income the profit must be calculated. It is because in the past for very many years such profit as has been earned has been placed to reserve that what has been called the "conflagration hazard" can be met without serious perturbation.

The fire at Cripplegate, London, which cost the companies over five millions sterling, may be mentioned as an example of what is meant by "conflagration hazard."

If in the dark ages there were insurance companies who estimated profit on the basis of capital, and distributed it, they must have been very short lived.

Replying to Mr. Bedells' remarks on "average"—"average" makes for equity, and I still say that in equity the partially insured should be partially paid. If he is fully paid his meanness profits at the expense of his neighbours' lack of it.

"Value" is a matter for the valuer. The basis of value so far as an insurance policy is concerned is "indemnity." The value for average is on the same basis as the value for loss. A competent valuer no doubt discovers many short cuts. I think probably Mr. Gleed could tell us of methods of arriving at what he calls the "brick and mortar value" of a building which could be used as a check on a cube or rough quantities. The "brick and mortar" value is, of course, not necessarily absolute proof of the indemnity value.

As to third-party risks, the companies can normally only insure against what is known to be the normal liability of the insured. The contractual or abnormal liability could possibly be covered if the nature and extent of it were disclosed.

There are very many factors that go to the fixing of rates of premium, e.g., location, construction, occupation, &c., and I cannot conceive that any useful purpose would be served by my giving examples.

My point is that, assuming a normal rate of, say, 5s. or 7s. 6d. per cent. for a particular risk, allowances amounting in some circumstances to as much as 50 per cent. may be obtained for construction and appliances.

These reductions of course apply not only to the building, but also to its contents, so that where a building owner so constructs and equips his building as to obtain these allowances he may, in addition to making his building attractive to prospective tenants, actually obtain additional rental from them because their insurance problems are so much simplified.

It may interest members to know that Mr. Eiloart, who is probably the doyen of fire loss assessors to-day, had the distinction of dealing on behalf of the insurance company with the claim for loss by fire that arose at Sandringham when the late King Edward was Prince of Wales.

I think Mr. Eiloart is unduly modest when he says that we assessors have no more than a smattering or hazy idea of value.

We are required on a first visit to a fire to give the company an approximate estimate of its involvement, and, I think, in course of time our knowledge of values must become extensive.

Mr. Eiloart stresses the point I tried to make in my Paper, that surveyors should regard the assessor as the experienced friend in need. He can in the early stages render them useful assistance.

Mr. Williamson (Past-President, Chartered Insurance Institute) made a very valuable contribution to the discussion, and incidentally replied effectively to the point raised by Mr. Bedells as to the incidence and disposition of the profits of an insurance company, and gave an illuminating example of values being comparative and not absolute.

My reply to his general criticism of the Paper as dealing more fully with insurance than with assessing is that, so far as my brother surveyors are concerned, insurance is or should be constantly before them whilst many of them may never be concerned with a loss.

It has been said that a good salesman is a man who interests himself rather in his customers' affairs than in his own.

I heartily agree with Mr. Gleed that one's clients should in their own interests seek professional advice as to the amounts for which buildings should be insured. As a general rule, the cost of reinstating the whole building, including the basement walls, is the amount that should be insured upon the building.

I think the better-known assessors, if not actually trained as building and quantity surveyors themselves, at least have gentlemen with these qualifications on their staff, and it is altogether unfair to the professional quantity surveyor if any of them make a practice of using his services and then object to paying him his proper fees.

Mr. Gleed has evidently met the case I had in mind where a building fitted with a sprinkler installation had to be altered to suit an incoming tenant. To obtain the rebate the installation must comply with the rules, and when the partitions are altered the position of the sprinkler heads must be altered accordingly.

It is, I think, well known that certain congested hazardous areas are subject to higher rates of premium.

Mr. Lovegrove described himself as practising in a district which is "prone to fire." In such a district fire-resisting construction and extinguishing appliances are clearly pointed to as having added value.

Mr. Lovegrove is wrong in supposing that the ordinary standard policy covers all the risks set out in my Paper. He has probably a houseowner's comprehensive policy. All the documents I have used as exhibits are obtained from the leading companies.

The theory as to electrical installations is that they must be carried out in accord with the fire office requirements. In fact I fear that non-compliance with these requirements is not rated up as it should be.

Mr. Lovegrove need have no doubt on the question of loss of rent if the house is rendered uninhabitable. The whole and not a part of the rent for the period for which it was rendered uninhabitable would be allowed.

As to garden fences, if Mr. Lovegrove will refer to a houseowner's comprehensive policy he will see that the walls, gates and fences around and pertaining thereto (that is, of course, to the building insured) are covered.

As to Exhibit "J"—improvements required after a fire—if one has a wooden building, and if after a fire rebuilding in brick is required, the company would, provided the policy was endorsed to cover improvements and the amount insured were sufficient, pay the cost of rebuilding in brick.

I have already dealt with the amount that should be insured—that is in my view the cost of reinstatement in the case of total destruction. Total destruction, of course, includes the basement.

If one buys a house for £2,000, and £1,500 would be the cost of reinstating the result of a very small fire, it is clear that that house should be insured for a great deal more than the cost of purchase.

Dealing with Mr. Lovegrove's point that the cost of preparing particulars of loss should be insurable, I think on examination this will be found to be quite a small matter.

Assuming plans and quantities are required as evidence of the loss, they would also be necessary for reinstatement, and the cost of these plans and quantities would in the circumstances I have set out under the heading "Professional Fees" on page 199 be covered.

Assuming the architect and/or surveyor engaged considers he should have an additional fee for negotiating the settlement, I think there may be circumstances in which he is entitled to this additional fee, and I do not think the payment of it entails any great hardship on the owner because in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the building as reinstated after the fire is superior to the building as it existed immediately prior to the fire.

Replying to Mr. Vigers, who could see no particular reason why one should pay extra for insuring professional fees, that is not the suggestion made in my Paper. I have said that provided the amount insured is sufficient to cover professional fees in addition to the builder's cost of reinstatement no difficulty will be met, but that to avoid any possibility of difficulty it is wise to divide the amount of the insurance on a building under the two headings (a) builder's cost of reinstatement, and (b) the professional fees involved.

What is altogether inequitable, but what is nevertheless very frequently done, is to insure two-thirds or three-quarters of the builder's cost of reinstatement and expect the companies, in the case of partial loss, to pay not only the builder's cost of reinstatement, but the architect's and surveyor's fees in addition.

The whole business of insurance is "indemnity" in exchange for an annual premium, and what I have tried to stress is that if the annual premium is meagre or insufficient it is inequitable to expect the indemnity to be generous.

Mr. Vigers' motor-car example is to an extent facetious, but may be met by the statement that I once had a motor-car that cost me £1,000. After six years' use I sold it for £40. If instead of being sold it had been stolen, I have no doubt that the insurance company would have thought £150 was a very reasonable indemnity to pay for it.

Mr. Colin Allen's experience when called upon to advise that buildings are frequently inadequately or improperly insured is the common one.

Additional costs to include improvements, or alterations to comply with requirements of local authorities, may be covered by endorsement on the standard policy (see my remarks under this heading, page 200 in the Transactions, where my Paper is printed in extenso, and Exhibit " J " in The Institution Library, for examples of the form of endorsement).

In this case the probable approximate cost of such improvements and alterations, to comply with authorities' requirements, is the sum which should be insured.

I have explained in my answer to Mr. Lovegrove's remarks why architect's fees should be made a separate item in the policy.

The difficulty referred to by Mr. Colin Allen in the case of Halifax Building Society v. Keighley and Another would not have arisen if the method advocated in my Paper had been followed (see paragraph headed " Property insured " by more than one policy," &c.), page 205 in the Transactions.

In my judgment surveyors generally have what I may call tidy as distinct from slovenly minds, and having occasion to prepare and submit particulars of loss, I think that surveyors at any rate should have no difficulty in ascertaining by reference to the policy the nature and extent of the indemnity intended to be granted, whilst, if they are called upon to advise on the insurance of buildings, I hope that reference to my Paper may remind them of the several risks involved which may be covered by insurance.

PAPER 548.

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING ACT, 1932.By I. G. Gibbon, C.B., C.B.E.(Principal Assistant Secretary, Ministry of Health).

---

INTRODUCTION.

The active interest and close co-operation of The Institution is important for the success of planning, and it is a privilege to address you on the Act which has just come into force. The assistance of The Institution has been unstintingly given to the Ministry of Health in the past, and in this connection I should like to express the gratitude of the Ministry, and my own in particular, for the unfailing help of your President, Mr. Gerald Eve, who falters before no conundrum. I am sure that your assistance will be given in equal measure in the future, and the Ministry will welcome it, criticisms as well as encouragement, for in planning we are always learning.

Planning is a response to the problems of the present age. Its wise exercise has become essential for survival and prosperity. Its object is, not to teach men their own business, and certainly not to do for them what they can better do for themselves, but to provide through the public authority a framework within which their activities may bring larger returns. To quote the circular recently issued by the Ministry—"the principal object of a scheme is to provide a plan within which initiative and enterprise, whether private or public, may be exercised to the best advantage." A plan is a means of economy, and any close student of modern conditions must be appalled by the large amount of preventable waste, the penalty of thoughtlessness.

It is noteworthy how the urgency of planning has won converts in recent years in all modern countries, in all spheres not only in town and country planning. It is the new evangel. And like all new evangels, it gathers its fairy tales. But all this growth of conviction has this firm root, that modern conditions have become so much more complex, effects of conduct, of men and of communities, so much more far-reaching, the new rush of changes so much more sweeping, that circumstances can be reasonably mastered only by applied and systematic foresight, that is, by planning.

It would be neither complimentary to The Institution, nor, indeed, decent towards constituted authority, if on this occasion I entered upon a detailed explanation of the Act. You will find it summarised in a concise little statement issued by the Stationery Office at the modest price of 4*d.*, daringly free from those ambiguities of Acts of Parliament which are so easy to criticise and so exceedingly difficult to correct—except by those who have never tried their hand at it. I propose, therefore, to deal primarily with the means of working the Act to the best purpose.

The Ministry have also issued, in addition to the circular, a set of regulations and two orders, one dealing with interim development, the other applying the regulations, with modifications, to schemes in course of preparation. Lest any of you should think that Government departments feast royally on regulations and the like, let me assure you that we find them a spare diet. It is no good blaming Government departments or even Parliament for them. They are a phase of present administration, which will continue until superseded by something simpler, a consummation possible only when there is more trust.

Model Clauses are an essential help to local authorities and to private persons, and a new set is being prepared. The Ministry will be glad of informed suggestions likely to add to the value of the Clauses.

The Act enables schemes to be made for any land, urban or rural, developed or undeveloped, except for "static land," an apt phrase coined by the Minister of Health. I will not add voice or ink to the much that has already been spent on the controversies when the static is dynamic or the dynamic static, a conundrum difficult for these days when we are assured by scientists that the seemingly most inert of matter is a maelstrom of motion! Anyway, you will find the question tackled in the circular, and I anticipate that in practice little difficulty will be found in carrying out the intentions of Parliament.

Control of agriculture is excluded from planning powers. There has been some criticism of this exclusion. It arises, I believe, largely from misapprehension. Few, if indeed any, would suggest that ordinary agricultural operations should be brought under usual planning control. What is chiefly sought is that urban development shall not be allowed mischievously to intrude on agricultural land, and this can be secured under the Act.

ECONOMIC FOUNDATION.

I have heard it truly said on more than one occasion in this room that planning is nothing more than good estate management on a large scale. The groundwork of a sound plan must be economic. It must minister to the prosperity of the district. The planner must be more than a little of an economist—and thus rank himself, if not among the major prophets of our modern Press, at least among the minor. Bread is the staff of life and the primary stuff of planning.

I believe that all this cannot be too strongly stressed. For historical reasons, the origins of planning demands in this country lie largely in amenities. Many laymen, not familiar with modern developments in this field, still, I fear, think of planning as directed chiefly to this end. Amenities are by no means to be neglected, and only ignorance can excuse any notion that there is any fundamental incompatibility between amenity and good business. But good business should be recognised as the primary goal of planning.

And I venture to think also that this fact needs to be more applied in the training of planners. However excellently they may be versed in the arts, whether of surveying, of architecture, or of engineering, without the economic background they may be as captains without a compass.

And lest I be misunderstood, let me remove one misapprehension of which I have seen traces. What I have said does not mean that the planner must be able to prognosticate with precision what development will take place in a particular area. If he could do that, unless gifted with a double dose of public spirit, he would become an estate speculator, and contribute handsomely to the relief of a burdened Chancellor of the Exchequer. Exact prophecy is out of the question in these fluid days. What may rightly be expected of the planner is to make the best calculation of probabilities that knowledge can provide and to set out the channels along which these probabilities can be guided to the best profit of the community.

Planning has not made a sufficient appeal to industry and commerce. This country stands in this respect markedly behind the United States. Planning is of vital interest to business. The tragedy, it is no less, of bad location, of absence of facilities available only through planning, the failure to adapt provision to the traffic and other conditions of to-day, these may be seen all round by any who have eyes to observe. It is really impossible to solve any of our great problems, traffic, for instance, just by piecemeal measures. They can be solved satisfactorily only by dealing with conditions as a whole, by planning.

In recent years we have raised the site planning of houses from the humdrum into an art. In industrial and commercial site planning one is almost tempted to say that, except here and there, we have scarcely yet realised that it can exist, notwithstanding that years ago in the Trafford Park Estate we gave the world one of the best examples of industrial site planning. Not, as has been foolishly said, that there is any intention of teaching the man of affairs his business, but that without concerted planning on a large scale the facilities necessary for most economical production cannot be provided, except for the very largest concerns.

A sound plan must be founded on a firm basis of fact. It is no use painting pictures on the clouds. Pretty plans are an offence in planning unless also practicable.

There is still a large field to be ploughed in the ground-work of planning. I am the last person to underrate the dreamers of utopias, but we need at the moment much more investigation of prevailing conditions and of the results of practice in order to secure a sound body of knowledge on which the art of the planner may be more firmly founded than on personal observation or predilection, however gifted. There are some interesting researches now being made in the United States on this subject, and it is time that we did more. The planner must be a realist. Not that the profits of good planning are not great even with present knowledge, but we can make them still more abounding. I believe that The Institution, working with such bodies as the Town Planning Institute, could make a notable contribution to this end.

CONSULTATION.

Modesty may not be essential for greatness ; it certainly is for a good planner. He is likely to land himself and the community in trouble if he rides just his own ideas. He must pick the ripest brains of the local community, and that of all sections, if he is to achieve the best.

Modesty is also required to achieve what is practicable, not to aim at the sky and to bring down nothing except trouble. This is especially so in the case of built areas, where there are likely to be many vested interests. A sense of proportion must be cultivated, not always easy judging by recent controversies. Given this essential modesty, the planning of built areas may often be simpler than that of areas hitherto undeveloped.

The fullest consultation is desirable for two other reasons. A good plan should meet local wishes and desires so far as reasonably compatible with the general interest. Moreover, in practice a good plan can often be achieved only by a liberal, and sensible, amount of give and take. Equally important too is an understanding of the objects of the plan especially among those whose interests will be affected. To quote again from the circular: "A preliminary statement or a scheme is in itself unavoidably a rather dry document to the ordinary man. Authorities through the Press and otherwise should show the living purpose behind them."

A local authority in preparing a plan acts on behalf of the whole of the local community. The more that local organised interests are brought into consultation as a body, the better are likely to be the results. Is there here room for some guidance by The Institution to its local members for securing and leading group consultation? It is a subject which The Institution may think well to consider.

A matter which I should like to urge from practical experience is this, that consultation should be definite. At the early stages, of course, there may be advantage, indeed it may be the only course of wisdom to exchange general views. But before the plan is finally settled, so far as possible the views of owners should be ascertained on definite proposals. There is always a risk otherwise that owners may think that general acquiescence has been unfairly construed and progress thus be hindered. But local authorities and their officials cannot do their share unless owners also play their part and give prompt consideration and decision.

ELASTICITY.

One difficulty that troubles many who are firmly convinced of the necessity and urgency of planning is how planning can be adapted quickly enough to meet changing conditions, a problem increasingly important because change has become so very much more rapid. The pace of civilisation has greatly accelerated, and conditions are far more fluid even than a generation ago.

For this and other reasons it may be well to restrict proposals, so far as reasonable, to essentials, schemes should not be complicated with provisions which may not be really necessary for many years yet, and, so far as compatible with the need for preventing abuses and future difficulties, measures for guiding development should not be finally decided and made operative until the time for the development draws near. Powers are given by the Act to make supplementary schemes and supplementary orders to fill details into the framework of an original scheme. It is the details of development, far more than the broad framework, that are subject to change, and this procedure of filling in the compartments of the frame as circumstances require renders adaptability easier.

The same purpose is also served by making the provisions of schemes as reasonably elastic as is practicable ; for instance, allowing specified forms of development as a matter of course, and other forms only with consent. But two words of warning. In the first place, elasticity is not sloppiness. In the second place, private developers must not put their claims too high. Some of the most troublesome issues of the past have arisen because authorities have allowed development which was within their discretion, but to which neighbouring owners objected. Because they cannot obtain under planning all the protection which they want, owners sometimes fail to admit the protection which they receive, forgetful that, if there were no plan, they would not receive any protection at all. The hottest difficulties of planning arise, not from conflict of public and private interests, but from disputes between private interests, and even the wisdom of Solomon sometimes pales before the task of reconciliation!

GENERAL DEVELOPMENT ORDERS.

A novel provision of the Act, of first importance, is contained in Sections 15 and 16. In some places in this country development has taken place in recent years which is lamentable in this twentieth century. In one such case the authority which ultimately became responsible for the area found no way of overcoming the trouble except by dealing with areas as slums—and most of the development had taken place since the end of the War. In another case, not so very far from this metropolis, I am told that in bad winter weather goods can be delivered to houses only in a punt dragged along the mud, such are the deplorable conditions.

It is not only that development of this kind offends public decency, but sooner or later it probably throws an unfair charge on the public authority, that is, an unfair charge on the pockets of the general ratepayers of the district, for authorities have no fairy gold. This is wasteful of public and private resources.

The powers of the sections to which I have referred are designed to prevent evils of this kind and to secure more orderly development, and conservation of public funds. There are some who would like a more clean-cut division between town and country than our freedom of development at present provides. But even they presumably would stick at the rigidity of some Continental governments where the development of the town is almost as narrowly restricted as though it were still contained within fortified walls. We in this country are informed by a riper spirit of sweet reasonableness, a spirit of ready compromise which constitutes no small part of the charm not only of the national character but also of our countryside. At the same time there can be little question that for excellence of development, for economy of outlay and not least for the preservation of amenities, measures are badly required to prevent disorderly development, which is an expensive extravagance that cannot be afforded. What the sections in question do is to enable an authority in its scheme to provide that general development shall not be allowed in any specified area until an order has been issued to that effect, while providing ample safeguards that particular development which may rightly be permitted is allowed to proceed. These provisions are likely to be found not only of value to the general community but also of benefit to owners as a body. They are an endeavour to meet in this particular sphere one of the most difficult of modern problems, to protect the general interest while at the same time allowing reasonable individual freedom.

RURAL AMENITIES.

One leading object of the new Act is to facilitate measures for preserving rural amenities. The growth of the demand for protecting the charm of our countryside has been one of the outstanding features of the last decade, a growth towards which such bodies as the Council for the Preservation of Rural England have greatly contributed. The Act provides means by which that sentiment can be crystallised into practice. In many places, little requires to be done to secure the desired end, but it is sometimes difficult to have that little done. What is needed now, even more than general propaganda, though that is still useful, are definite suggestions how amenities may be preserved ; and that can often be achieved, not only without detriment to private owners, but to their advantage. The prevention of wasteful scattered development, including thoughtless ribbon development so belaboured of recent years, the proper siting of grouped development, the saving of objects of natural beauty, the undertaking of improvements, whether public or private, so as in largest measure to fit in with them—these are matters which usually should not be difficult to attain, given thought, initiative and energy. The penalties of stupidity exceed many times those of malice. I am sure that in this matter The Institution and its members will be whole-heartedly on the side of the angels.

Reference may be made in this connection to the control of design and external appearance, a subject which applies to town equally as to country. Powers of this kind call for sense and discretion. Individual initiative in all spheres is among the most precious of gifts, without it no modern country can long endure and prosper, and planning schemes should not only scrupulously avoid its hindrance but should foster it. In the circular it is suggested that—"The powers (those relating to design and external appearance) should be used for preventing what may reasonably be regarded as 'outrages,' buildings out of keeping with their surroundings and an offence to the neighbourhood."

A word about another question which comes up from time to time, that of national parks. I was a member of the Departmental Committee which considered the subject. What is primarily required in this country is not the acquisition of large stretches of land, but the preservation of prevailing characteristics and reasonable means of access. With tact and energy, and there is no reason why the two should not more often run together, very much of what is needed should be possible without a penny piece of cost.

COMPENSATION AND BETTERMENT.

The provisions in the new Act relating to compensation are substantially the same as in the old. There are additional safeguards, in particular those relating to existing buildings, providing, as I believe will be admitted, a bulwark against unfair action. Some additional matters may be excluded from compensation, but, here again, strictly within the limits of fairness. The provision that building may be prohibited on land wholly unsuitable for the purpose will prove valuable in a number of cases; I have in mind a signal instance which occurred some time ago where land should have been scheduled against building, but the local authority could not face the claim for compensation. Where building does take place in such cases, later the general body of ratepayers may be burdened with heavy costs for public works.

The circular expresses the opinion that "broadly, the measure in which a scheme is good is also the measure in which questions of compensation are removed, except where land is reserved or acquired for public purposes," through consultation with owners and a reasonable spirit of give and take.

The provisions as to betterment have been radically changed. The principle underlying the change is that betterment is not to be claimed until realised.

There are some who think that this question of compensation and betterment needs to be more thoroughly considered. The same kind of issue often arises, for instance, where an authority acquires land for an open space, paying perhaps a high but perfectly fair price, most of which is accounted for by building value. The problem is an obvious one, but its solution is by no means simple. The difficulty is to find a method which is at the same time practicable, scrupulously fair, and not discouraging of initiative. The problem is one which The Institution, with its wealth of knowledge and experience, is particularly fitted to investigate, to find an effective solution fair and beneficial to all parties. If social problems are allowed to simmer until they become acute, they may be settled more by emotion than by thought.

Section 25 of the Act contains a provision which is of particular interest to The Institution. Provisions can be inserted in schemes enabling an authority to acquire land held in such plots as to render it impracticable to secure satisfactory development of the land, because the plots are of inconvenient size or shape, or the arrangement or alignment is inconvenient, or because of the multiplicity of interests.

Members of The Institution are familiar with the fact that, especially in the inner parts of old towns, the most profitable redevelopment may not be possible without merging small plots into one ownership, and that the value of the land as one whole may greatly exceed the sum total of the value of the individual plots. The difficulty cannot always be overcome by voluntary means. Measures have been tried in other countries, notably the Lex Adickes and similar measures in Germany, the purpose of which is to merge the several ownerships, with a subsequent reallocation of the land among the owners ; but the measures have been more praised on paper than successful in practice. The provision of the new Act affords a simpler and more effective solution.

The most advantageous redevelopment of the inner parts of our towns, for private and for public benefit, requires more consideration than it has been receiving. We have to carry on much of our business, and live much of our lives, in second-hand structures. That is no reason why, when we do reconstruct, we should do so on a second-hand framework. The changes of recent decades render such indolence of ingenuity far too expensive. We have long ceased to build motor-cars on the framework of the old horse buggy. We need to modernise our towns, not only fairly but gainfully to private interests, not with any grandiose notions but with shrewd adaptation of expenditure to means. A problem this, worthy of the best ability of the members of this great Institution.

TIME LIMITS.

Complaint has been made of the long time which authorities take to prepare schemes. Without excusing delay, it has to be remembered that, since the War, authorities have been faced with a multitude of distractions, and the preparation of a good and fair scheme is often no simple matter.

The Act sets out definite time limits, broadly three years from the date on which a resolution becomes effective to the date on which a scheme is submitted to the Minister, unless for special reasons extended time is allowed. A limit of time has this advantage, that the authority are set a definite goal and are more likely to resist the temptation to shelve difficulties. But special measures will have to be taken to comply with the limits. The problems which have to be solved in preparing a scheme are often many and difficult. It may be necessary to keep the scheme to the leading essentials and, not less important, to do a good deal more preliminary work than has been usual before the resolution is passed.

But as necessary as all these is the willing co-operation of owners and their representatives. It is to their interest that schemes shall be prepared with despatch. I can assure you that all the delay in the past is not by any means to be laid at the door of authorities. Here again the Ministry rely on the full support of The Institution.

INTERIM DEVELOPMENT.

The experience with regard to interim development under the old Act affords one of the best testimonies to the general sweet reasonableness of local authorities, despite caricatures, and of owners, and of the prevailing spirit of accommodation. As you are aware, there was, and still is, a right of appeal from any refusal of permission or from conditions imposed. Appeals have been remarkably few. A large proportion of the appeals received have either been withdrawn or have been settled. This is a heartening fact, and it is earnestly to be hoped that this comparative paradise will continue.

The position in the matter of interim development (that is, development between the date of the effective resolution and the date of the operative scheme) is substantially the same under the new Act as under the old, with some extensions and some additional safeguards for owners, in particular, again, special safeguards for owners of existing buildings. It is to be noted that under the new Act interim control extends to development of land though no buildings are erected. Applications are to be deemed to have been granted if not decided within two months, unless extended time is agreed. Authorities are entitled to make a contribution, where warranted, towards damage or expense when an application is refused or granted subject to conditions. Reasons for refusal or for imposing conditions have to be stated in writing, a useful check, if sometimes embarrassing, and a practice long adopted by the Ministry in deciding appeals. I have heard at times of the "dead hand" of interim control, fanciful imagery to make flesh creep, but without frequent relation to fact; of specific complaint we have had singularly little. Anyway the new dispensation largely removes even the possibility of delay, and developers themselves can help speedy decision by full information and a reasonable spirit of accommodation.

CONCLUSION.

Time will not permit of reference to many other provisions of the Act which merit mention, including those relating to the preservation of buildings, the laying of schemes before Parliament, and the right of resort to the Courts. No one can complain that the interests of owners are not adequately safeguarded.

The success of the Act will depend upon the spirit and the intelligence with which its powers are exercised. Far too much waste takes place to-day, not just public waste but still more private waste, and waste not only of pounds, shillings and pence but of human well-being. Not from deliberate intent or want of care or even from thoughtlessness for the immediate object, but because of want of a broader outlook, of forethought and of planning well ahead of immediate needs and with circumspection, looking so far as possible to all the conditions which are likely to determine what provision will repay. Planning is crystallised forethought. It yields handsome dividends.

There is no question here of bureaucracy, of placing in the hands of public authorities what can best be done by private enterprise. What is needed is to provide for the common good a framework for prospective development without which existing values may be gravely depreciated and the returns from new development seriously reduced, whether in material prosperity or in amenity of life. New problems cannot be solved with old technique. We have diligently to discover and wisely to apply new instruments of public service equal to the task before us in this our very complicated modern era. Planning is among the principal of these instruments. Upon its effective exercise will depend in no small measure the issue whether in the coming years we are to master or to be mastered by the material development which threatens to overwhelm us. It is a task of high endeavour and, with thought and will, well within our reach, and I venture to think that no organised body can render a more excellent contribution to this end than The Chartered Surveyors' Institution.

A DISCUSSION took place on Dr. I. G. GIBBONS' Paper entitled

Mr. F. LONGSTRETH THOMPSON (Chartered Surveyor) said he was glad to have the privilege of proposing a vote of thanks to Dr. Gibbon for what he was sure everyone would agree had been a most stimulating address. Dr. Gibbon had put forward, with characteristic clarity, the true aims of planning, and had emphasised that a well-thought-out and well-administered planning scheme made both for efficiency and economy ; and he had stressed the need for co-operation between landowners and their advisers and the planning authority.

Dr. Gibbon had, of course, said many other things, including the admonition that, to use his own words, " the " ground-work of a sound plan must be economic." That was a proposition, or, perhaps, more accurately, an axiom, which would immediately be accepted, as would also the corollary that, to use his own words again, "we need much more investigation of prevailing conditions and of the results of practice in order to secure a sound body of knowledge on which the art of the planner may be more firmly founded than on personal observation and predilection." Personally he knew from experience that not only was there a great lack of systematised information on the subjects which should form the very basis of planning—such as, for instance, the present trend in the growth and distribution of population, and the current tendencies in the location and requirements of industry—but the information which did exist was nearly always difficult and frequently expensive to obtain. It existed, of course, amongst other places, in the archives of Government departments, and he thought those who had any responsibility in that matter would do a great service if they could make such information as they possessed more available for those who were engaged in planning. There was, he believed, a movement on foot for the establishment of an organisation to undertake research into those and similar matters, and to make available reliable information upon them for the use of those engaged in town and country planning. He felt sure that both The Chartered Surveyors' Institution and the Town Planning Institute would be very willing to give all the assistance in that direction which lay within their power.

The Paper raised a large number of technical points of especial interest to the members of The Institution, and no doubt many of those points would be dealt with by subsequent speakers. There was, however, one on which he would like to say a few words himself, namely, the question of elasticity in the provisions of schemes. Dr. Gibbon had devoted several paragraphs to that subject, and, when recommending that the provisions of schemes should be reasonably elastic, he made the observation, probably to reassure some of the town planners, that elasticity was not sloppiness. If that observation was intended to apply more particularly to zoning provisions, he thoroughly agreed that elasticity should not be sloppiness ; but, on the other hand, he took the view that much of the present zoning which appeared in town planning schemes was decidedly sloppy.

The usual three zones, as perhaps most of the members present would recollect, were (1) a general residential zone, which provided for residential buildings and others by consent ; (2) a general business zone, which provided for residential buildings and business buildings and other buildings by consent ; and (3) a general industrial zone, which provided for any type of building except, possibly, buildings for a noxious industry, and those sometimes by consent. That was, in effect, a series of zones which were progressively watered down by the addition of another type of building, and the watering-down was really on the basis of allowing, in each successive zone, buildings which were considered more detrimental to the amenities than those allowed in the one before. The last zone of all, the general industrial zone, was very little better than the complete absence of any zoning at all ; it was a zone in which anybody might put up any building whatsoever.

It seemed to him—though probably Dr. Gibbon would join issue with him on the point—a case where elasticity was sloppiness, and he would venture to make the suggestion that the kind of elasticity which was required—and there would be general agreement that elasticity was a necessity in the provisions of a planning scheme—could much better be obtained if the contents of each zone were made rigid, but the actual application of the zones made subject to periodical revision. It seemed to him that otherwise the watering down of zoning was unfair to owners within those zones, who had no guarantee that the character of the zone which appeared on the map was going to be adhered to, because buildings of other types might be allowed at the discretion of the authority. Further, that type of zoning really frustrated the primary object of planning, which was to reserve certain areas for the use to which they were most suited in the general interest of the community. He put forward the suggestion, therefore, that zones should tend more to rigidity in content, and that elasticity should be obtained by periodical revision.

Dr. Gibbon had pointed out, with great impartiality, most of the difficulties which had to be overcome in the adjustments which were necessary to reconcile public and private interests. Indeed, the only difficulty to which the Paper made no reference was that encountered in the endeavour to satisfy the Ministry of Health that the provisions of the scheme were reasonable. He did not know whether that omission had any special significance, and whether it was too much to hope that, under the new dispensation, that particular difficulty no longer existed.

He had much pleasure in proposing that a very hearty vote of thanks be accorded to Dr. Gibbon.

Mr. W. R. DAVIDGE (Chartered Surveyor) said it was a pleasure to second the vote of thanks to Dr. Gibbon, who was always interesting and generally provocative, though he had not been provocative in the present Paper. Dr. Gibbon had successfully avoided giving a description of the Act itself and what the Act could do, and in that he had probably been wise, since the Ministry would undoubtedly themselves have to unravel the tangles at a later date.

Dr. Gibbon's speech had been most inspiring, and he touched the right note when he said that The Chartered Surveyors' Institution and its members were the people who could make or mar planning. They were primarily concerned with economics, and there could be no question that, so long as economics was interpreted in the broad sense that Mr. Gibbon had indicated, it was the keynote of good planning.

It was not merely a question of £ s. d. The position, as shown by an accountant's balance sheet for a particular estate, was only one side of the economy of that estate. It was possible for there to be a big profit in the balance sheet of an estate together with an absolute ruination for the people who had to live on or near that estate. Amenities must be preserved ; that word had been grossly abused, but it did mean all that made life worth living in a particular district, all that attracted people to that district. All that must be preserved, and, if possible, improved and added to.

It was quite possible to improve the amenities. It should be realised that practically the whole of the beauties of the countryside in England were artificial. This country owed a great deal to previous generations of surveyors, the predecessors of the present members of The Institution, who laid out the different estates up and down the country. Every one of those estates, with their beautiful avenues of trees, their woodlands and their stately mansions, owed its existence to the fact that some member of the surveyors' profession, probably generation after generation, had nurtured it, tended it, and brought it to the perfection now so much admired.

That profession, more than any other, had the power to work the new instrument of planning as it ought to be worked and as it needed to be worked, with understanding. He had had a great deal to do with members of The Institution, and could say quite truthfully that in every instance he had met with nothing but help and co-operation from all those with whom he had come into contact. There were still a few people, of course, who lived in pre-Victorian days, but at the same time a wonderful change had come over the country in the last few years. There was now a broad understanding of the aims in view.

As Dr. Gibbon so well said, a certain amount of elasticity was needed ; consultation was necessary, and interest must be aroused at the earliest possible stage. Every member of The Institution could make his contribution to town planning schemes affecting his own locality or the estates with which he had to deal.

Dr. Gibbon, in saying that elasticity must not degenerate into sloppiness, had touched on a vital point. There was a tendency in certain quarters to weaken control in this direction and that direction until the original framework of the plan began to become jelly-like rather than rigid, and from being elastic went on to lose its cohesion. It must be quite clearly understood that, in the first place, any plan must have a definite purpose and shape. To a certain extent it must be restrictive, but to a large extent it must be constructive. There was no estate in this country which had been successfully developed without restrictions. Some restrictions were essential to the successful development of any landed property, and if a town planning scheme was to be successful, there must be a certain amount of restriction in it ; not too much, but a definite firmness of purpose.

A tribute should be paid to the Ministry of Health for the thorough way in which they had dealt with the various town dwelling schemes submitted to them. The interests of landowners and of the community as a whole were well looked after by the Ministry, and even in those cases where the owners and land agents and others did not attend and object, the Ministry themselves would remove any difficulties or injustices which might be apparent. He remembered a public inquiry, lasting exactly  $1\frac{1}{2}$  hours, in which everybody in the district had their say. Six months later he had received from the Ministry 42 foolscap pages of observations on the scheme. That showed how thoroughly and impartially they studied the interests of all parties, whether represented at the inquiry or not.

Dr. Gibbon had himself emphasised the need for simplifying the procedure as far as possible. Personally he was sure the Ministry of Health would favour simplification so far as it could be achieved with complete satisfaction to as many people as possible. But the keynote of the Paper was that The Chartered Surveyors' Institution was the body to collaborate in town planning schemes to make them a success, and to see that they achieved the purpose for which they were designed.

Mr. G. D. SQUIBB (Barrister-at-Law) (Visitor) said that he wished that it had been possible for the other members of his profession who had to deal with planning matters to hear Dr. Gibbon's Paper. Accustomed as they were to dealing with the abnormal, the cases in which unhappy differences arose either between landowners and the planning authorities, or between landowners themselves, the members of his profession were inclined to lose sight of, or, perhaps, never even to see, the normal, the ends and objects which the planner attempted to achieve.

Dr. Gibbon in his Paper quoted the saying that planning was nothing more than good estate management on a large scale. Personally he ventured to think that it would, perhaps, be more accurate to say that the aims of planning were the same as those of good estate management on a large scale. The process of planning differed from that of estate management in one essential point. The estate manager was usually acting for one owner, whose approbation and good will he had when setting about his work ; but the unfortunate planner, particularly in urban areas, was usually dealing with the land of a large number of owners, whose entire good will he could hardly hope to obtain. The man who owned both a drawing-room and a pigsty was hardly likely to want to keep his pig in the drawing-room. The difficulties arose when one had a man who owned only a drawing-room and yet wanted to keep a pig ; and that was the problem which had to be faced. He might possibly sum up the aims of planning as " A place for everything and " everything in its place." Dr. Gibbon in his Paper mentioned Section 25 of the new Act, which went some way towards overcoming those difficulties in built-up areas when they came to be replanned, but, of course, that could not go the whole way, and it did seem that the only thing which could enable planning to come to a satisfactory issue was the co-operation, of which Dr. Gibbon spoke, exercised to its fullest degree. It was there that it seemed that societies like the Council for the Preservation of Rural England, whose secretary was present that evening, could exercise a powerful influence. They educated public opinion in a most effective way, and were worthy of all the support which private individuals and members of The Institution, in their professional capacity, could give them.

During a somewhat detailed study of the Act, and of the regulations and orders under it, he noticed what at first blush seemed to be a somewhat weak spot in the legislation. Provision was made in Section 17 of the new Act for making orders for the preservation of buildings of architectural or historic interest. Once such an order had been made, the owner could not demolish or substantially alter the building without the consent of the planning authority, but there appeared to be no provision with regard to keeping the building in anything like reasonable repair.

Mr. LANGLEY TAYLOR (Chartered Surveyor) said he would like to join with previous speakers in thanking Dr. Gibbon for his Paper. The urgency of planning referred to in the Paper was, with the economics of the question, the keynote of the situation. He felt it was perhaps rather too early to discuss details until the model clauses were available, but he felt sure that members would welcome the suggestion that they could make recommendations to the Ministry on any point on which they felt they needed guidance in those model clauses.

Dr. Gibbon rightly said that the planner was expected to make the best possible calculation of probabilities, so as to guide the scheme to the best advantage of the community. That was a great undertaking demanding close co-operation between the interested parties. If the agents of owners would be less distrustful, much more could be done. Adjoining estates could confer and approach the planning authority with their united ideas. In his personal experience that method had resulted in great mutual advantage.

He hoped the Ministry would do all in their power to see that elasticity in its true sense was practised. Dr. Gibbon had said that "developing owners must not put their claims too high." With deference, he would like again to quote Dr. Gibbon and to say that, in dealing with appeals, some members hoped the Ministry would remember that "elasticity is not sloppiness." Temptation, on such pleas as giving employment, should, he submitted, be resisted to obviate prejudicing the schemes as a whole.

The Paper stated that, under the Act, urban development could be prevented from intruding on to agricultural land, but the reference was not in as downright language as personally he would have liked. It was of the first importance, in his opinion, that the town and country should be kept separate, and he saw no reason why that could not be achieved.

Under the heading of "Rural Amenities" he was glad to find reference made to the Council for the Preservation of Rural England, and in that connection he would like to urge the advisability, and even the necessity, of making use of the voluntary panels set up by the Royal Institute of British Architects and the Council for the Preservation of Rural England. It was an unfortunate fact that, in some counties where those panels existed, no use had been made of them. The panels could not advertise themselves. The Council for the Preservation of Rural England had done, and were doing, much to make them known, and the Minister had given them his blessing. He hoped that some means could be found of urging planning authorities to turn to the panels for the advice which was freely and wholeheartedly offered. Agents acting for developing owners, moreover, might remember the panels and influence the authorities in their favour.

Another factor in the Act of which the developing owner might make more use was the reduced width of carriage ways now permissible under a scheme. Those reductions from the bye-law widths might easily pay for a service road parallel to a fast-traffic main road. He would like to point out the advantage of a parkway between the main road and the service road, which could be conveyed to the local authority for the maintenance of trees or shrubs. The agreed value of the land comprising such parkway could be set off against any future claim for betterment. From the estate point of view, when the land was developed, such a belt with trees and shrubs would break the noise of traffic.

Even if the land was not to be developed immediately, he suggested the advisability of creating a parkway as offering a definite advantage to the estate in the long run.

Sections 15 and 16, which, with Section 19, probably most concerned those who were dealing with rural development, had, he believed, been summarised somewhat as follows: (1) That building operations could be prohibited permanently where likely to involve danger or injury to health or excessive expenditure of public money on services ; (2) that building operations could be prohibited or restricted temporarily pending the issue of a general development order, where they would be likely seriously to injure amenity or where no public services were available. In the second case he understood the question came up for revision every third year. Those who cared for the amenities of our countryside must be on the watch that something was not lost because the revision period was overlooked. Even on the basest ground, amenities had a money value in the development of estates. The temporary restriction pointed to a low density, referring to acres per house instead of to houses per acre. He would like to refer to the question of private open spaces. Many owners were unwilling to agree to a permanent private open space in these days of all too rapid changes and of development which was sometimes called progress. Such an arrangement might have serious effects on the next owner of the estate, and he was of the opinion that there was much to be said for that point of view. The creation of private open spaces, however, had advantages, and especially that of removing a building value from the land in the case of death duty valuations. He suggested, therefore, that owners should be recommended to agree to a private open space for a limited period of twenty-five to thirty years. At the end of that period, however, the reversion to building land was getting near, and the valuer would put some value on it, so that he would suggest that, before the end of the agreement, it should, if desired, be renewed.

In conclusion, he would like to ask one question. In the case of land being reserved in the preliminary stages for a public open space, and, subsequently, not required by the planning authority for that purpose or any other purpose, could the owner claim compensation and, if so, on what basis?

Mr. WILLIAM THORPE (Chartered Surveyor) said that he agreed as to the desirability and necessity of town planning, but considered that the time taken before a scheme was confirmed by the Minister of Health was too long. Dr. Gibbon mentioned in his Paper "a limit of three years "with a possible extension." That seemed a reasonable time ; but in a case that he was engaged upon, the town planning authority started their scheme ten years ago and it was not yet settled. Before developing, the town planning map had been inspected, and it was found that a building line had been laid down by the county council which necessitated his clients setting back about fifty feet along the whole of the frontage. His client developed according to that line, and upon sending in a claim for compensation a month ago, he was informed that, as the scheme was not yet confirmed, compensation could not be claimed. Nor was it known when it would be confirmed. Mr. Thorpe said that the point arose frequently, and he thought that it would be of interest to members if Dr. Gibbon would give some idea as to the method of dealing with it.

Previous speakers had said that money did not come into town planning, but personally he thought it did. Surveyors were employed by clients to develop estates, and they had to see that they were developed economically. With regard to open spaces, Mr. Thorpe said that he felt that, if an open space was shown on a town planning map and purchased by a local authority as such, it should always be an open space. He referred to a case where a client purchased land adjoining an open space which had been purchased by the local authority. When developing, he had informed his purchasers that it was a permanent open space. After two years the local authority required land for housing, and a portion of that land was suggested. There were no restrictions upon the land, and it was not dedicated to the public. It did not seem fair that a local authority should be able to force an owner to sell his land for an open space and then use it for housing. There did not appear to be any certainty, and in the case referred to above he was at a loss to explain to his client what steps could be taken if the local authority had commenced building operations.

Continuing, Mr. Thorpe said that as developers had found that the local authority took a long time before they made up a private street, they had taken the matter in hand themselves and made the roads up to the specification of the local authority. The latter were not too helpful in that matter, and he thought that the Ministry of Health might do something by asking them to give every facility to the owners in regard to the taking over of the roads. If the local authority would agree to inspect the work when carried out, the difficulties would not occur. In cases that he had dealt with the local authority would not supervise the work, and informed him that, until the road was made up, they could not make an inspection as they had not the requisite powers under the Public Health Act, 1875.

Dr. Gibbon had mentioned in his Paper that there should be a certain amount of elasticity allowed in a town planning scheme. He (Mr. Thorpe) suggested that where local authorities had any two densities of 8 and 12 in their town planning scheme that an intermediate one of 10 should be allowed.

Mr. K. E. B. GLENNY (Chartered Surveyor) said that, as a Junior Member of The Institution, he would like to express his thanks to Dr. Gibbon for a very inspiring address on the subject of town planning. He could not speak for his fellow-members, but he felt sure that all of them would respond to Dr. Gibbon's call for co-operation. Personally he felt that everyone would be most happy to co-operate where the Ministry were concerned, and he could only suggest with great respect that Dr. Gibbon should use his influence to secure that that same co-operation was forthcoming from the local authorities.

Much had been said that evening on the question of elasticity, and Dr. Gibbon in his Paper spoke of three years as being the new limit from the date on which a resolution became effective to the date on which the scheme was submitted to the Minister. Personally he hoped that elasticity would not be largely practised in connection with the period of three years, because his own experience in that respect was somewhat unhappy. He was proposing to develop an estate about three years ago, and those concerned were informed that a regional town planning road was planned to go through the estate. The Regional Committee had taken three years to decide whether that road should be built or not. It had changed its position no less than three times, and the latest information now was that the road was not to be built at all. His clients did not mind whether the road was built or not, but they did want to know what the position actually was, and when, if ever, the road was going to be built. Uncertainty was a bad thing. If they knew the road was coming they could develop accordingly, but one waited and waited for the Town Planning Committee, or whatever local authority was responsible, to deal with the point, and yet no decision was arrived at.

Another unfortunate thing was this. He and those for whom he was acting were approached recently by a local authority, under its preliminary statement, to inquire if they would object as an amendment to certain land being scheduled for permanent allotments. They said they did not particularly want the allotments in the situation proposed, but that if the council was prepared to negotiate they would be happy to fall in with its wishes. They went to considerable trouble and had any number of interviews and got out a fresh development scheme for the land, in order to incorporate those allotments and provide for the altered drainage arrangements, and after about three months of negotiations there came a curt note from the council to say the committee at its last meeting had decided to schedule other land. No other comment was made. If that constituted co-operation with local authorities it made it very difficult for practitioners, with the best will in the world, to co-operate.

If he might conclude by asking one question, he would like Dr. Gibbon to give some indication of the Ministry's views on the question of density. He believed one of the objects of the Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill was to provide for smaller and cheaper housing, and it seemed to him quite impossible for that to be done unless the density restrictions were relaxed. He was wondering if the Ministry had in mind going so far as to relax the present almost maximum density of 12 to 16 or even 20 for houses of the smaller type which was now envisaged.

Mr. B. M. GOODWIN (Chartered Surveyor) said that Dr. Gibbon had laid stress on the fact that town planning should be a framework. That framework should be a complete one, and a local authority should not be permitted to lay out one section of a road under the Town Planning Act while another section was left to be provided for under some other powers which they might have. He knew of instances where a patchwork arrangement of that kind had caused a great deal of local misunderstanding, and he thought it was a point which should be cleared up if possible.

Another point was that certain road widenings were left to be provided for under Section 30 of the Public Health Act of 1925. There, again, he felt that there ought to be some indication in a town planning scheme that such road widenings were to be provided for in that way. A town planning scheme should be comprehensive.

With regard to open spaces, he did not know if the Ministry of Health had considered the contingency that a testator might leave certain land to a tenant for life, and thereafter to a public body as a public open space. The question then arose as to what would happen if the tenant for life, unknown to the reversioners, granted a lease for, say, 21 years. The lessee, not being in a position to examine the deeds, could have no idea of what had taken place, and in certain circumstances the result might be to delay the user of the land as a public open space for a considerable while.

Mr. SEPTIMUS BEVEN (Chartered Surveyor), referring to the density unit, said provision was made for densities of 10 and 12 or 8 and 16 houses per acre, but it was within his experience that, those densities being laid down, a builder would erect his 8 to the acre on half the area, and then sell the rest of the land to someone else to develop. Moreover, if the remaining land were less than an acre, it often became a deposit for rubbish. That was a question which often faced the local authority, and he would like an explanation of what was to be done about it.

Mr. H. G. BUSS (Chartered Surveyor) said that he could not help expressing the view that there was a danger of the procedure in planning being "upside down." Plans were being prepared, in the first instance, for rural, urban and regional areas, until a sort of patchwork was completed. He felt sure the time had arrived when the matter should be regarded from the larger standpoint of the country as a whole. If planning were to be "good business" for this country, it seemed to him there must be a larger outlook and the country must be planned as a whole. One should look forward to the time when a genius like Sir William Morris, who wished to initiate a large business, could go to the Ministry of Health and say "To which part of the "country should I go to find a really suitable site with "adequate services and traffic facilities?" It seemed to him there should be a skeleton framework for the whole country, within which regional areas should be planned, and so on down to rural districts.

He had, perhaps, an even greater admiration for Dr. Gibbon than some others present that evening, since he had had the pleasure in the past of being directly associated with him at the Ministry and of realising what a vigorous brain Dr. Gibbon possessed. In the Paper certain problems were thrown out for The Institution to solve, and personally he had been struck by the section headed "Compensation and Betterment," and suspected Dr. Gibbon might regard it as the most important in his Paper. Dr. Gibbon said: "There are some who think that this question of compensation and betterment needs to be more thoroughly considered. The same kind of issue often arises, for instance, where an authority acquires land for an open space, paying perhaps a high but perfectly fair price, most of which is accounted for by building value. The problem is an obvious one, but its solution is by no means simple." Dr. Gibbon's difficulty was probably that when an open space was bought he found that it was necessary to pay the market value as created by all the potential purchasers, but when it came to a question of betterment, the potential purchasers faded away, or at least their presence was sometimes difficult to prove. Evidently he sought a fair but certain method of translating compensation into betterment. The question of planning was essentially one for the Junior Members of The Institution, and he appealed to them to make it their problem for the future. He was sure Dr. Gibbon would appreciate any solution they could suggest for the difficulty to which he had referred. The Act was, he believed, likely to be of more far-reaching effect on property than any other Act passed for some considerable time, and the Junior Members should get to know it "inside out"; he suggested they should read it many times if they had not done so already.

He thought it would be very helpful to Dr. Gibbon to have observations from some of the members on the problems which he had thrown out for The Institution to solve. Personally he had referred to the question of compensation because he thought planning was unique in that respect. In most cases connected with land an order was made and the extent of compensation could be reasonably foreseen, but in planning the scheme was made first ; it was considered in every way, and finally confirmed by the Ministry of Health, and then arose the questions of the extent of compensation and betterment. That method was unique so far as compensation was concerned.

There might be a tendency for those questions of compensation and betterment to be put aside, to some extent, so far as the members of The Institution were concerned, but he thought they were questions which should be considered now. It was very difficult, from the owner's point of view, to realise that when the scheme was all settled he might have to pay betterment, and it was also difficult from the point of view of the local authority to appreciate that without, in some instances, any idea of the nature of the claims for compensation when the scheme was confirmed they would have to face such claims and pay them. It seemed to him it would be helpful—and he hoped Dr. Gibbon would agree—if landowners, as represented by surveyors, did not leave the questions for consideration in the dim future. It was due to the community at large, to the local authority and to the landowner that members of The Chartered Surveyors' Institution should consider questions of compensation and betterment, and should not merely let them slide. They should at the earliest opportunity say to the local authority " Look at the injury you are doing to " my client's land," and explain to the local authority how the unfairness might arise and why it was considered that injury was being done, and be prepared to deal with the question of betterment in the same way. The more the local authorities and landowners together faced the questions of difficulty which were certain to arise, the better it appeared to him it would be for everyone concerned.

Mr. C. G. PURVIS (Professional Associate) said there was one weakness in the Act to which he would like to draw attention. For the last 15 years at least it had been generally recognised by all those who had to inquire into the causes of slums or unhealthy areas that one of the principal causes was the penetration of industries into residential areas ; yet in Section 6 (2) of the Act it was provided that the Minister should not approve any resolution to prepare a scheme in the case of land already built upon, unless he was satisfied " that public improvements are likely to be made, or other " development is likely to take place, within such a period " of time and on such a scale as to make the inclusion of " the land in a scheme expedient." He would like to ask whether Dr. Gibbon would consider the erection of a single factory within the area of a block of cottage property in one of the suburbs of London " development on such a " scale." It seemed to him that it would not be regarded as on that scale, and from that point of view he thought the sooner the restriction on the inclusion of built-up land was removed the better.

Mr. D. R. WATERS (Professional Associate) said reference had been made to patchwork planning schemes in this country. The speaker who made that remark should go to Singapore. Personally he felt a little hurt that Dr. Gibbon should have omitted any reference to that colony. Singapore, at some time prior to 1929, set up the Singapore Improvement Trust, and the whole island had been planned. Provision had been made for railways to run to the industrial districts, and the evil-smelling rubber factories and so on were nicely isolated. He imagined there was general agreement that planning beforehand was necessary, and from that point of view Singapore was Utopian.

The PRESIDENT, before putting the vote of thanks, said that members of The Institution much appreciated Dr. Gibbon's courteous and cordial recognition of the efforts they had made and would continue to make to assist the Ministry of Health in any task which it had to perform. He believed the Ministry always gave careful consideration to the advice given by The Institution because the officials of the Ministry knew that The Institution had no axe to grind other than the public weal. The Institution, as Mr.

Bidwell, his immediate predecessor, had said, was entirely impartial. It represented owners, occupiers, local authorities, municipalities, the great railways—in fact, every conceivable interest in property. Its task was to give technical advice to Government departments, when asked, as to what would offer the greatest advantage to the public generally.

The ability and vision of Dr. Gibbon enabled him always to see the other point of view. It was that quality in particular which fostered the harmony between The Institution and the Ministry of Health in regard to town planning.

Nearly every speaker, except Mr. Langley Taylor, had been at pains to abstain from saying anything in connection with town planning which bore upon the actual practice of the surveyor. He was sure members would agree that later on, having got a general idea of the subject from Dr. Gibbon, it would be necessary to have a Paper read dealing with the technical details as they affect the surveyor.

He would like to thank Mr. Waters for the interesting information which he had given about town planning in Singapore. In wishing him every success in his future career in that distant country, he would like to say how much The Institution appreciated the attendance of members from abroad.

With regard to the remarks made by Mr. Squibb, it would be remembered that the Council had authorised the preparation of a Memorandum on the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, for the use of surveyors, written from the surveyor's point of view. This work, undertaken by Mr. Malcolm Trustram Eve and Mr. Squibb, Barristers-at-Law, was now completed and would be in the hands of members in the near future.

The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation.

Dr. I. G. GIBBON, in reply, said he considered it a privilege to address the members of The Institution. He proposed to reply to the discussion in writing, but he would like to say that the Ministry would always be glad to make clear, as far as they could, any of the dark ways. He would also like to assure the gentleman from Singapore, who had spoken, that he was well aware of what had been done there, and also on the Malay Peninsula. Fortunately, or unfortunately, in this country they had not the same amplitude of power and freedom as had the authorities out there ; and that must also be his reply to Mr. Buss. If Mr. Buss could persuade the country to appoint him as the Mussolini, or perhaps he should say the Hitler, of national planning, he would, if backed up by The Chartered Surveyors' Institution, be delighted to produce a national plan. Whether Sir William Morris would be pleased with it or not was another question, as to which he would give no undertaking whatever! He did not covet the job!

The Ministry considered that the full support of The Institution was of great importance, and he could support, in that connection, what the President had said ; whereas he had never found The Institution lacking in tenacity for the rights of the private owner, he had always found that it took the public standpoint, and saw the interests of the private owner in terms of those of the community at large. It seemed to him that to-day such bodies as The Institution were essential and integral parts of the government of the country, and to officials like himself it was an abiding pleasure and a constant help to be able to consult them in the difficult problems with which they were confronted. He hoped the good will which The Institution had shown so freely in the past would be abundantly continued in the future.

Dr. GIBBON has sent the following written reply to the various points raised in the discussion :—

Elasticity of Provisions—(Mr. Longstreth Thompson).—The measure in which zoning can be made rigid depends on the degree of accuracy with which the need of the particular land for a specific use can be forecast. Zoning cannot wisely be more rigid than conditions permit. Much also depends on the agreement of owners. And much also on good planning, which in turn depends not only on the planner but on the enlightenment of owners. Where definite provision can be made, for example, for an industrial zone with specific site planning for this purpose, exclusive zoning for industry may be practicable.

Panels of Architects—(Mr. Langley Taylor).—The Ministry in their recent circular again urged the use of these panels and will continue to do so.

Land reserved for a public open space and proposal withdrawn—(Mr. Langley Taylor).—Compensation cannot be claimed because land is reserved in a preliminary statement for a public open space, but is not so reserved in the scheme. The owner is safeguarded by Section 10 (6) of the Act, which provides that in certain circumstances he may require the purchase of land proposed to be reserved for a public open space where there is genuine intention to build and permission is refused.

Time limits—(Mr. Thorpe).—Conditions in recent years have been abnormal, and have delayed the preparation of schemes. Under the new Act the time limit of three years can be extended only if there are special circumstances warranting that course.

Taking over roads—(Mr. Thorpe).—It is open to a local authority to enter into an agreement for the construction of a road to their satisfaction and for its adoption on completion.

Density—(Mr. Thorpe).—There is no reason why a density of 10 should not be provided if warranted by local conditions. A number of schemes contain this density.

Roads—(Mr. Glenny).—Without in any way excusing delay, it has to be remembered that in recent years conditions in road-making have been abnormal. Where building is actually proposed, decision can be secured by an interim application and, if need be, by appeal.

Density—(Mr. Glenny).—There is no maximum density of 12 to the acre. Twelve is the usual highest for reasons of economy not less than of amenity, but higher densities have been provided where justified by circumstances. There is still much misunderstanding. Twelve houses to the acre does not mean necessarily division of an acre into twelve equal plots with a house on each ; for economy and amenity it may be better to concentrate buildings at higher densities, leaving open land as public or private open spaces, as allotments or as play grounds (tennis courts, for instance), so that the average density is maintained over the land unit as a whole, and the land unit may be more than an acre.

Roads—(Mr. Goodwin).—Usually the scheme lays down the lines and the widths of roads, with building lines, and other powers are suspended so far as they are inconsistent with the provisions of the scheme. The making of the road is, however, left to be carried out under the general law, whether by the local authority or the private developer, when required. The Ministry try to see that a scheme provides fully for the matters with which it deals ; but schemes would be made unduly long and cumbrous if the many provisions of the general law under which works may be carried out were included. Furthermore, additions or alterations of the general law may be made subsequent to the scheme.

Open space : tenant for life—(Mr. Goodwin).—I am informed that under the Settled Land Act, 1925, a tenant for life can grant an ordinary lease for fifty years, irrespective of whether the term granted endures beyond his own life. The local authority would take the land in remainder subject to the lease.

Densities—(Mr. Septimus Beven).—Density is controlled by an average measured over a land unit ; the land unit may be more or less than an acre, according to local circumstances. If part of a land unit changes hands the density limit still applies to the land unit as a whole, subject to the power of the local authority to vary the land unit under the provisions of the scheme. The local authority are required by the scheme to keep a register of land units and a prospective purchaser can readily ascertain the position. Provisions are also contained in the scheme for apportionment of building to respective owners where the land unit is divided.

National planning—(Mr. Buss).—Without in any way minimising the theoretical advantage of national planning, its practicability has definite limits, limits of knowledge and of control of conditions. We are nowhere near sufficient control of future economic conditions to dictate where, in a national scheme, particular kinds of manufacture, for instances, shall be located. The most practical approach at the present time is the regional, big enough for broad considerations, not too big for intensive knowledge and judgment of conditions and trends. Some matters have to be determined from the national as well as the local standpoint, the lines of the principal through roads, for instance, and this is borne in mind in considering proposals in schemes.

Compensation and betterment—(Mr. Buss).—The Ministry urge that questions of compensation and betterment should be settled so far as possible while a scheme is being prepared. Experience indicates that there are not many cases which cannot be settled by friendly negotiation between the authority and private owners and with reasonable give and take. There still remains the larger question of the possible pooling of interests, which merits further investigation.

Land for which schemes may be prepared—(Mr. Purvis).—The proposed incursion of a factory into an area hitherto residential is at any rate a good presumption that the area is one for which a scheme may be prepared under the Act. The subject is dealt with in pages 3 and 4 of the circular on the Act recently issued by the Ministry.

THE SIXTY-FIFTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE COUNCIL.
Session 1932-1933.

ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING,

The Council.

Mr. R. H. Powell, Mr. H. B. Napier, Mr. H. F. Chambers and Mr. D. G. Motion retired from the Council at the end of last session. Of these, the two first named have since passed away. Until his death Mr. Powell was the third oldest living member of The Institution, having been elected as Professional Associate in 1874. Both he and Mr. Napier had given freely of their time and energy to The Institution, on the Council, on Standing Committees, and in the work of the Sussex and Gloucestershire Branches, which they represented over a long period of years. To them, and to Mr. Chambers and Mr. Motion, the retiring Professional Associates of Council, the sincere thanks of The Institution are due for their services.

The new Members of Council, elected at the beginning of the session, were Mr. Gilbert Gardner (Sussex), Mr. F. Peter (Gloucestershire, &c.), Mr. Geoffrey Vigers (London), Mr. G. J. N. de St. Croix and Mr. W. E. A. Bull (Professional Associates).

The Secretaryship.

In the sixty-fifth year of The Institution and in the sixty-fifth year of his age, Mr. Alexander Goddard, C.B.E., relinquished the appointment of Secretary, which he had held since 1905. He leaves Great George Street with the lasting gratitude and affection of the members, old and young, whom he so well and faithfully served during his strenuous years of office.

Mr. Goddard's services were recognised at the Ordinary Meeting on 5th December, the last which he attended in his official capacity, when the President presented him with a cheque for one thousand guineas from the general body of members. The ovation which Mr. Goddard received in rising to reply was a warm tribute to his life's work and to the affection and esteem in which he was held.

The Council desire to express, both on their behalf and on behalf of the members of The Institution, their warm appreciation of the unfailing energy, courtesy, tact, ripe judgment and literary ability with which Mr. Goddard discharged his duties as Secretary for so many years. The comparative tables appearing elsewhere in this Report, and illustrating the growth of the membership and examinations of The Institution since the late Secretary took up his appointment, are in themselves, perhaps, the best monument of his work for The Institution and for the profession, and the best justification of the Council's feelings on his retirement.

The Council have provided Mr. Goddard with a retiring allowance, and, as already announced by the President, a portrait of Mr. Goddard will be painted and hung in The Institution.

On learning of Mr. Goddard's intention to retire, the Council advertised for a new Secretary, and received applications and testimonials from over 400 candidates. Their final choice fell on Major A. H. Killick, D.S.O., M.C., who, in addition to a distinguished military career during and since the War, brings with him a reputation for high administrative ability in official positions.

In 1883 "Associates" were divided into "Ordinary" and "Professional" Associates.

The following Honorary Members were elected during the year:—

Mr. Alexander Goddard, C.B.E., Secretary of The Institution from 1905 to 1932.

Mr. A. S. Gaye, C.B., O.B.E., Permanent Commissioner of Crown Lands.

His Honour Judge E. M. Konstam, K.C.

The Earl of Jersey.

Death has again exacted a heavy toll from the membership of The Institution during the year. Reference has already been made to the deaths of Mr. R. H. Powell, Lewes (1874), and Mr. H. B. Napier, Bristol (1889). Among other members of long standing who have passed away are: Mr. B. R. C. Tower, Ellesmere (1876); Mr. F. Neame, Faversham (1879); Mr. W. J. Dyer, London (1882); Mr. E. J. Howell, London (1883); Mr. W. R. Lawrence, London (1883); Mr. J. G. Drew, Exeter (1884); Mr. Francis Hornor, Norwich (1887); Mr. John Darch, London (1889); Mr. Arthur Body, Plymouth (1890); Mr. S. G. Gamble, Chiswick (1890); Mr. Arthur Grover, London (1890); Mr. J. H. Hodgkinson, Ashton-under-Lyne (1890); Mr. F. Rutley, London (1890); Mr. John Brocklebank, Rochdale (1891); Mr. Hyman Marks, London (1891); Mr. J. W. Millyard, Kinton (1891); Mr. H. L. Wetherall, Basingstoke (1891); Mr. Thomas Young, London (1891); Mr. Walter Lawrance, London (1891), a Past-Member of Council and Chairman of the Quantity Surveyors' Committee; Mr. H. A. Prall, Rochester (1892); Mr. Edward Willis, Chiswick (1893); Mr. H. A. Pritchard, O.B.E., London, Assistant Forestry Commissioner and a member of the Forestry Committee; and Mr. W. J. Jeeves, C.B.E., K.C. (Associate, 1905). Obituary notices of these and other well-known members have appeared in the "Journal" during the year.

Finance.

The Council are able again to report a healthy condition in the finances of The Institution. As compared with 1931, there is an increase in the expenditure for the year ended 31st December, 1932, of £1,331, chiefly accounted for by the issue of the quinquennial index to the "Journal," the Exhibition of Maps and Plans, and increased expenditure on publicity, donations for professional objects, and legal charges. There is also an increase in staff salaries, this being due to the retention of Mr. Goddard's services, in a consultative capacity, for three months after the new Secretary's appointment. Provision having already been made under the Staff Superannuation Scheme for the late Secretary's retiring allowance, no further charge in that respect will now fall on Institution funds.

The amount received by way of entrance fees from new members and placed direct to Capital Account was £1,341. This, with the surplus from Income Account, has enabled the Council to increase the reserve by £4,000.

It is worthy of note that the auditors' annual revaluation shows an increase of £8,265 in the value of The Institution's investments.

The Examinations.

Table C shows the number of entries for the 1933 examinations as compared with previous years and the number of passes. Table D sets out in analytical form the results achieved by candidates in England and Wales. In addition 135 candidates were re-examined in their Typical Subject. Of these 73 were successful.

There were 79 Scottish candidates, of whom 29 entered for Part I., 7 for Parts I. and II., and 16 for Part II. of the Intermediate, 21 for the Final, Direct Fellowship and Special Degree, and 6 for Typical Subjects. Of these, 23 passed Part I., and 15 Part II., of the Intermediate, 17 the Final, Direct Fellowship, and Special Degree, while 5 were referred back in their Typical Subjects.

The Irish candidates numbered 18, of whom 3 passed.

For the Women House-Property Managers' Certificate Examination 4 candidates presented themselves, of whom 2 were successful.

A change in the administration of the examination system was made during the year. It has been decided to discontinue, from and after the 1934 examinations, the marks allowance which candidates sitting for the Intermediate Examination as students have hitherto received. The concession, which was originally made to encourage candidates to pass the Preliminary or an exempting examination, has become out of date and illogical since the latter examinations have been made compulsory for all candidates. The effect of this change is that all candidates, whether sitting for the Intermediate as students or as non-students, will be required to obtain 55 per cent. of the maximum marks in order to secure a pass.

The Special Diploma Examinations.

The examinations for the Special Diplomas in Forestry, Agricultural and Tenant-Right Valuations, Rating, Town Planning, Sanitary Science (Part I.), and Land Surveying and Levelling, were held in June, 1932. The following table shows the results:—

| —           | Forestry. | AgriculturalValuations. | Rating. | SanitaryScience(Part I.). | LandSurveyingandLevelling. | TownPlanning. |
|-------------|-----------|-----------------------------|---------|-----------------------------------|----------------------------------------|-------------------|
| Entered ... | 2         | 8                           | 8       | 1                                 | 1                                      | 1                 |
| Passed ...  | 1         | 4                           | 5       | 1                                 | 1                                      | —                 |

The names of the successful candidates were: Forestry, Mr. G. Langley Taylor ; Agricultural Valuations, Messrs. W. N. Carder, R. C. W. Davey, R. M. Peacock, and R. H. Wood ; Rating, Messrs. V. Ardern, W. S. Barnes, W. R. Brackett, S. G. Butt, and W. E. Peak ; Sanitary Science (Part I.), Mr. P. E. Middleton ; Land Surveying and Levelling, Mr. M. P. Hyatt.

These examinations are held once every three years, and in the intervening years also if five or more candidates present themselves. The Town Planning Diploma Examination, which is held jointly with other bodies, is held every year. They are open only to corporate members of The Institution, who are able to satisfy the Council that they have received practical training and experience in the field of the examination for which they wish to enter. The minimum age limit is twenty-five, except for Part I. of the Sanitary Science Diploma and for certain portions of the Forestry Diploma Examinations, for both of which the age limit is governed by that for election to corporate membership.

Apart from the material advantages which the holding of a Special Diploma may bring, the Council suggest that the specialised knowledge for which these examinations call is worth pursuing for itself alone. They would invite the younger members to consider, particularly at the present time, the advantages of gaining the experience necessary to qualify them to sit for the Town Planning Diploma.

The Examiners.

Once more the Council have pleasure in placing on record their sense of indebtedness to the examiners for the Preliminary, Professional and Special Diploma Examinations, who, as in previous years, have performed their arduous and responsible duties with conscientiousness and efficiency. A complete list of their names was given in the Annual Report for 1931-1932. For the year under review the following changes, due in each case to resignation, have taken effect: Mr. W. W. Dearle vice Mr. H. Riley (Analysis of Pricing); Mr. Osmond Cattlin vice Mr. B. Briant (Heating and Ventilation); Mr. W. Murray-Harris, Mr. H. H. Turner, and Mr. S. L. Porter vice Mr. A. W. Davson, Mr. H. A. Mackmin, and Mr. H. W. Langdon (Quantities); Mr. R. J. Dibdin vice Mr. E. W. Eason (Report, Sub-Division II.). In the Preliminary and Special Test Examinations Mr. J. W. Warren, Mr. J. R. Colclough, and Mr. H. G. Evans replace Mrs. Alexander Goddard, Mr. J. Steel and Mr. W. Selves Walker, respectively, in German, Economics, and General Knowledge.

The College of Estate Management.

At the recent Professional Examinations students of the College gained 12 out of the 14 medals and prizes awarded; in addition, of the successful candidates in the various examinations, 137 in the Final, 1 in the Direct Fellowship, 8 in the Special Single, 2 in the Women's House Property Managers Certificate, 156 in Part I. of the Intermediate, 188 in Part II. of the Intermediate, and 60 in Parts I. and II. of the Intermediate, were students of the College.

The Annual Country Meeting.

Leamington was selected as the centre for the Country Meeting of 1932, the arrangements for which were undertaken and admirably carried out by the Warwickshire, Worcestershire and Staffordshire Branch. A full report of the meeting, which was greatly enjoyed by the members who attended it, appeared in the "Journal" for August.

The Council desire to acknowledge the indebtedness of The Institution to the Mayor, Deputy-Mayor and Corporation of Leamington, Lord Algernon Percy, the Marquess of Northampton, Messrs. Cadbury Brothers, Ltd., Messrs. The Dunlop Rubber Company, Ltd., Messrs. Armstrong-Siddeley Motors, Ltd., for their services in assisting to make the meeting the enjoyable event it was. Special thanks are also due to the Chairman of the Branch (Mr. Albert Grove), to the Hon. Secretary (Mr. W. Scofield Suckling) and to the members of the Reception Committee for the admirable arrangements which they, individually and collectively, made for a meeting of which many pleasant memories will be retained.

The Annual Country Meeting of 1933 will be held at Bath from the 21st to 24th June, by invitation of the Gloucestershire, Somerset, and North Wiltshire Branch.

The Publications.

The Programme of Papers, read and discussed at Ordinary General Meetings during the session was as follows:—

The meeting on 6th February was marred by the death, from pneumonia a few days beforehand, of the lecturer, Mr. D. B. King, whose Paper was introduced by his principal, Mr. J. W. Tyler (Fellow).

The thanks of the Council are due to the lecturers whose names appear above and to the members who took part in the discussions on the Papers.

Meetings of members practising as Quantity Surveyors were held on 16th November and 15th February. At the former, Mr. Sydney Tatchell (Vice-President of the Royal Institute of British Architects) and representatives of various sections of the building industry attended and explained the scope and functions of the new Building Industries National Council; at the latter a Paper on "Softwoods" was read by Mr. Percy B. Meyer. These proceedings were reported in the January and April issues of the "Journal."

Learned Counsel has been instructed to prepare a Memorandum on the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, which the Council propose shall be printed and issued to all members in due course. As the Council considered that the completeness of the Memorandum would suffer if the Regulations made under the Act by the Minister of Health were not included, and as those Regulations were not available until April, it has not, unfortunately, been possible to issue the Memorandum earlier.

The Index to the "Journal," Volumes VII. to XI. for the years 1927 to 1932, and to the "Queries and Replies" section for the same period, was published and issued to members in separate book form during the year. A similar separate index was issued in 1928 for Volumes I. to VI. (1921 to 1927) so that every member now has in his possession an easy form of access to the information contained in the "Journal" for the past eleven years.

By arrangement with the Royal Institute of British Architects, the circulation to members with the "Journal" of the Notes from the Information Bureau of the Building Research Station was begun in July.

Members are again reminded that the publications "The Chartered Surveyor and His Work" and "The Sale, Purchase and Letting of Property" are available for purchase at a small charge. They were published with the object of spreading information about the profession among potential clients, and of drawing attention to the need for proper qualifications. Members themselves can do much to help in disseminating their contents.

The Library and Collections.

The value of the Library and the Loan Library has been maintained by the purchase during the year of a number of new works on technical and professional subjects and new editions of existing works.

The Fifth (Relief) Edition of the One-inch Ordnance Survey of Great Britain is being purchased for the Library as sheets become available. The issue of this edition was begun in 1932 and will be completed in about seven years' time.

Among the other additions which have been made to the Library during the year may be mentioned the Regional Survey of New York and its Environs (eight volumes, 1927-29), and the Graphic Regional Plan of New York (two volumes, 1929-31).

A loan exhibition of some 180 valuable old maps and plans was hung in the Lecture Hall and first-floor landing and thrown open to the public during October and early November. It was attended by a large number of members and visitors, including several well-known authorities on old maps, and received favourable notices in the Press. The exhibition included a number of volumes of old maps from The Institution Library. The sincere thanks of the Council are due to the lenders of the valuable and interesting exhibits which were shown.

The exhibit of bat-willow timber from the Forestry Museum was awarded the Silver Medal of the Royal Agricultural Society at the Royal Show at Southampton in July. This year the Museum is supplying exhibits to the Royal Show at Derby and the Bath and West Show at Wimbledon.

During the past twelve months exhibits have been presented to the Forestry Museum by the London County Council, Viscount Cowdray, Viscount Burnham, Messrs. The Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., Ltd., Messrs. Stuart Surridge, Ltd., Mr. Alan Arnold, and others, to all of whom the thanks of the Council are due.

The Standing and Special Committees.

There have been 12 meetings of the Council and 103 meetings of the Standing and Special Committees during the year under review. The Parliamentary Committee followed the Town and Country Planning Bill through both Houses of Parliament, and, in addition to the amendments referred to in the last Annual Report, had seven further amendments put down in the House of Lords. The new Rent Restrictions Bill was examined in detail, and a memorandum thereon was prepared and submitted to the Minister of Health with satisfactory results. The attention of the County Branches concerned was also drawn to certain provisions affecting real property in the Essex County Council Bill, the Colne Corporation Bill, and the Barking Corporation Bill. Other Bills examined and dealt with were the Housing (Financial Provisions) Bill, the London County Council (General Powers) Bill, and the London Overground Wires Bill.

The attention of the Minister of Agriculture was called to the effect which might be anticipated on the value of property to which tolls were attached if the provisions of the scheme for regulating the marketing of bacon pigs were enforced as originally proposed.

The Scale of Professional Charges has come under review during the session, and discussions are still in progress with the other societies concerned.

Reference was made in the last Annual Report to the need for assimilating, as between London and the provinces, the right to claim relief under the Derating Acts. The deputation which waited on the Metropolitan Boroughs Joint Standing Committee to urge the need for amending legislation was received with obvious sympathy.

Representations were made to the appropriate Government Departments on the practice of acquiring authorities entering into negotiations for the purchase of land for public purposes without serving notices to treat and subsequently withdrawing ; to the Board of Trade on the subject-matter of their Circular No. T.R. 7, which appeared to invite competition among surveyors, auctioneers, &c., on the basis of fees, and to two local authorities which had, in specific instances, refused to recognise the one-third increase in Ryde's Scale. The practice adopted by one Government Department of reserving the right to settle differences between agents as to the allocation of their remuneration where more than one agent is employed, and of endeavouring to secure professional services at less than scale fees, is receiving attention.

The case of Ralph Pay and Taylor v. Summit Estates, Ltd., being, in the Council's opinion, a case in which a legal principle of importance to the profession was involved, financial support was given towards the plaintiff's costs in the actions in the Court of Appeal and the House of Lords. An extensive report of this case has appeared in the Law Cases Section of the " Journal."

On the invitation of the London County Council a report was made on proposals for the permissive adoption of the one-pipe system of drainage in London, and on proposed consequential amendments to the existing London drainage bye-laws.

In order to promote the effective and continued operation of the Housing (Rural Workers) Act, 1926, the County Branches were invited to make reports to the Agricultural Committee as to the attitude of county councils towards the making of grants under that Act. A summary of these reports was made and forwarded to the Branches with a letter urging them to do all in their power to encourage the making of applications for grants by landlords, and the sympathetic treatment thereof by the county councils concerned.

The Rating Diploma Section, which now numbers 51 members, has held three meetings during the session, at which Papers on the rating of sporting rights, the derating of laundries, and the need for assimilating derating procedure in London and the provinces, were read and discussed. The authors were Mr. A. Lockwood, Mr. T. G. Daniels and Mr. A. H. London respectively.

At the instance of the Forestry Committee, a conference of persons representing the Land Agents' Society and the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute was called early in the session to consider the lines on which evidence should be presented on behalf of these three Societies to the Inter-departmental Committee on the Utilisation of Home-Grown Timber. The evidence was presented on behalf of the three Societies respectively by Mr. Leslie S. Wood, F.L.A.S. (Fellow), Mr. D. A. Rawlence, F.A.I. (Fellow), and Mr. C. F. Stone (Fellow).

Arising from the evidence given before the Departmental Committee, the Council and the Forestry Committee co-operated with the Central Landowners' Association, the Land Agents' Society and other bodies in preparing a memorandum on the marketing of home-grown timber and other woodland products. This memorandum appeared in the "Journal" for March.

Resulting from a discussion on the subject at the County Branch Conference of 1932, the question of limiting the number of articulated pupils taken by individual principals was considered during the year. The views of the Council on this subject were published in the "Journal" for December.

Arising also from a discussion at the County Branch Conference last year, a new system of voting for the election of Council has been approved. Members will now be required to place a mark against the candidate for whom they wish to vote instead of erasing the name of the nominee for whom they do not wish to vote.

In connection, also, with the election of the Council, and in order to ensure that there shall be an election by the general body of members, County Branches have been requested, when their sitting representative does not wish to seek re-election, in each case to nominate more candidates than there are vacancies.

The Council themselves have always adopted this practice in nominating candidates for election as Sectional Representatives.

The work of the Quantity Surveyors' Committee and its Sub-Committees is the subject of a separate annual report which is printed in the "Journal" for July.

Professional Conduct.

The Code of Conduct was promulgated on 1st January, 1932, becoming fully operative as from 1st January, 1933. The Council desire to record their appreciation of the loyal and active co-operation of members in all parts of the country during the early days of the Code.

Twenty-one cases of departure from the requirements of The Institution as to professional conduct and practice were dealt with during the year, and appropriate action was taken in each case.

The Agricultural Conference.

The Second Agricultural Conference, arranged by the Agricultural Committee, was held on 6th December, and was attended by 72 members from all parts of the country. The morning session was devoted, firstly, to the discussion of technical subjects of special interest to surveyors in agricultural practice, and, secondly, to an instructive address on the Wheat Act, 1931, by Mr. H. D. Vigor (Vice-Chairman of the Wheat Commission). In the afternoon Sir Douglas Newton, K.B.E., who acted as the agricultural representative of the Government at Ottawa, kindly addressed the Conference on the decisions reached at Ottawa in so far as they affected the British farming industry.

There were keen discussions on each item of the proceedings, a report of which appeared in the " Journal " for January.

The County Branches.

The President and the Secretary have visited the greater number of the County Branches during the period under review, and were impressed by the loyalty, virility and energy displayed in all parts of the country. The Council are fully alive to the importance of the work, educational, administrative, and social, which the County Branches perform for the benefit, in particular, of those members who practise at a distance from London ; work which they would urge is deserving of the support of every member.

The Annual Conference between the Council and the Chairmen and and Honorary Secretaries of County Branches was held at Great George Street in March, when a number of items of professional and domestic interest were discussed. A report appeared in the " Journal " for April.

Included in the sessional programme of County Branch meetings during the year were Papers and discussions on the following subjects, the list of which is an interesting sidelight on the scope and variety of the profession: The Town and Country Planning Act, 1932, on which Papers were read in several Branches ; the giving of expert evidence ; the Local Government Acts ; the Private Street Works Act, 1892 ; building Acts and bye-laws ; road widenings and improvements and compensation claims in connection therewith ; rural electrification ; agricultural valuations ; the Wheat Quota and the outlook for agriculture ; statutory small holdings ; revaluations for rating ; practical points in rating and valuation ; the effect of the present financial position on property values.

The Irish Branch was, as from the beginning of the year, divided into two separate organisations, which will henceforward be known as "The Northern Ireland Branch" and "The Irish Free State Branch," with headquarters and examination centres, respectively, in Belfast and Dublin.

The Northern Ireland Branch held their first meeting on 3rd May. Lord Craigavon (Prime Minister of Northern Ireland) and other high personages honoured the new Branch, and through it The Institution, with their presence at this meeting, which in every way augured well for the future success of the Branch.

On an application from members practising in Kenya, the formation of a Branch for that area was authorised by the Council during the year.

Reference must here be made to the valuable memorandum which was prepared by the Executive Committee of the Scottish Branch on the new Rent Restrictions Bill, in so far as it will affect property conditions in Scotland. This memorandum was forwarded by the Council to the Minister of Health and the Secretary of State for Scotland.

The International Congress of Surveyors, 1934.

Preparations are in progress for the next quinquennial International Congress of Surveyors, which, by invitation of the Council, will be held in London in 1934. It is expected that the surveying profession in the majority of European countries will be represented at the Conference, and the co-operation of the Foreign Office has already been secured.

The Junior Organisation.

Seven Ordinary Meetings of the Junior Organisation have been held during the Session under review. At the inaugural meeting in November Mr. S. W. F. Patching (Probationer) read his Paper "Surveying in the Southern Shan States, Burma," to which the President's Prize was awarded; and in December the Ryde Memorial Prize Paper, "Notes on Interest Rates—The Effect of the New Level of British Credit on Real Estate Values," was read by Mr. N. P. Risdon (Professional Associate). The other Papers read during the Session were: "Property-Owners and the National Grid Scheme," by Mr. C. E. R. Hayward (Professional Associate); "The Making-up of Private Streets," by Mr. L. J. M. Perkis (Professional Associate); "For Sale by the Candle," by Mr. C. E. Kenney (Fellow); and "Tithe Rent-Charge — A Plea for Revision of the Tithe Acts," by Mr. A. C. Golding (Professional Associate). The February Meeting was devoted to a Mock Arbitration under the Electricity (Supply) Acts, 1882-1928, in which Mr. Frank Hunt, c.v.o. (Member of Council), acted as official arbitrator. Messrs. C. H. Hunt, F. G. Norton Fagge and K. E. B. Glenney were counsel, solicitor and expert witness respectively for the acquiring authority; and Messrs. A. R. C. Hall, E. J. Poulton and E. C. Smith acted in similar capacities for the claimant.

The Chartered Surveyors' (1913) Club Special Prize was not awarded this Session, the Junior Committee being of the opinion that, although the meetings had been well supported, no member had made a sufficiently outstanding contribution to the success of the Session for him to merit the prize.

The Annual Full Committee Meeting was held on 16th December to discuss matters of domestic interest. Thirteen out of the seventeen Junior Branches were represented in addition to the London and Unattached Country Members.

The Annual Junior Members' Dinner was held at the Park Lane Hotel on 16th December, and was attended by the President, Sir Robert Gower, O.B.E., M.P., the President of the Land Agents' Society, Mr. A. M. Trustram Eve, and other guests. The attendance numbered eighty, a figure which may be regarded as not unsatisfactory considering the difficult times.

The Annual Dance was held on 13th January at the Criterion Restaurant, and resulted in a profit of £19 4s. 7d., which was handed to The Chartered Surveyors' Benevolent Fund.

A new Junior Branch for Surrey was formed during the Session.

The Junior Committee have decided, with the approval of the Council, that henceforward the age limit throughout the Junior Organisation shall be the same, instead of differing as between London and Country members. For the Session 1933-1934 the age limit will be thirty-three years.

The Chairman for the year was Mr. G. J. N. de St. Croix, and the Hon. Secretary Mr. J. A. F. Watson. The names of the Junior Committee are given in the current List of Members. To them and to the members responsible for directing the activities of the Junior Branches throughout the country the thanks of the Council are most heartily due for their invaluable work on behalf of The Institution.

The Employment Register.

During the period under review 456 names were entered on the Employment Register as compared with 501 for the previous year. Of these, 241 (as compared with 268) were at one time or another out of employment, and 199 (as compared with 224) were looking for better appointments. The remainder were either registered as desirous of obtaining part-time work, or were on leave from abroad and seeking temporary engagements in this country.

Ninety-eight appointments (as compared with 102) were obtained through the Employment Register during the year. Of these, 21 were in the land agency branch, 39 in the valuation branch, 19 and 18 respectively in building and quantities, and 1 in mining. Eight others began private practice or obtained partnerships.

There have, fortunately, been indications during the latter part of the session of a slight improvement in the employment position.

Miscellaneous.

The Council and the Forestry Committee have co-operated with the Central Landowners' Association, the Land Agents' Society and the Royal English Forestry Society in the preparation and submission to the Minister of Transport of a memorandum on the injurious effects which were likely to be inflicted on the home-grown timber trade if the recommendations of the Salter Committee as to the taxation of heavy lorries were passed into law.

Conferences have taken place with the Central Landowners' Association on the present position with regard to tithe rent-charge and on the questions of amending Section 8 of the Tithe Act, 1891, with a view to meeting the present difficulties, and of arriving at an amicable revision of the 1925 settlement. Representations have been made in that sense to the Minister of Agriculture and Fisheries.

As a result of conferences with the Central Landowners' Association and the kindred professional societies concerned, including The Institution, agreement has been reached with the Central Electricity Board on the question of compensation for electricity wayleaves. The schedule of annual payments to be made by the Board by way of rent for towers and by way of interference with agriculture was published in the "Journal" for April.

A deputation, on which The Institution was represented by Mr. Robert Cobb, Mr. A. J. Burrows and Mr. Alexander Goddard, C.B.E., waited on the Minister of Agriculture and the Secretary of State for Scotland in November to urge the need for early attention by the Government to the problems of agriculture. The deputation was organised by the Central Chamber of Agriculture.

The Council have co-operated with the Land Agents' Society, the Law Society and other bodies preparing representations to the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the subject of death duties on agricultural land.

The Council welcome the formation of the Building Industries National Council, which was constituted in January as an organisation to promote unity of purpose in the building industry, to co-ordinate the work of existing bodies such as the Council of Review and the Advisory Council of the Building Industry, and in particular to mitigate unemployment and hasten the return of prosperity to that industry. The Institution has become an associated body of the Building Industries National Council, on which it is represented by Mr. C. H. Bedells, Mr. Oswald Healing, Mr. E. C. Harris, and Mr. J. M. Theobald.

The Institution was invited, and has consented, to co-operate with other societies and bodies in the work of an Industrial Development Committee for South Wales and Monmouthshire, and on the proposed Thameside Industrial Development Board.

Sir John Oakley, G.B.E. (Past-President), was appointed by the Prime Minister in March as a member of the Standing Committee to advise the Commissioners of Crown Lands in connection with the urban estates belonging to the Crown.

The Report of Lord Donoughmore's Committee on Departmental Legislation was issued during the year under review. The evidence given on behalf of The Institution was specially referred to in that part of the Report which discusses the publication of the reports of inspectors appointed to hold public enquiries under various statutes.

The Report of the Inter-Departmental Committee on Agricultural Tied Cottages, before which Mr. J. E. Bidwell (Past-President) gave evidence for The Institution, was issued during the year.

Sir John Oakley, G.B.E., and Mr. Dendy Watney were appointed to represent The Institution on the Aerodromes Advisory Board, which it is proposed now to set up with official status.

Mr. Dendy Watney and Mr. H. A. Steward have been reappointed to represent The Institution respectively on the Architects' Registration Council and on the Admission Committee of that Council pursuant to the Architects' Registration Act, 1931.

The Institution qualifications have been recognised in a Bill for the registration of architects and quantity surveyors in Kenya.

The President has made the following appointments to statutory Committees set up under private Acts for the purpose of advising local authorities upon the elevation of buildings:—

Bootle Corporation : Mr. F. J. KIRBY (Fellow).

Sheffield Corporation : Mr. C. E. FOX (Fellow).

Richmond Corporation and neighbouring Authorities : Mr. C. H. BEDELLS (Past-President).

Mr. C. CHART (Member of Council).

Mr. J. A. ROSEVEAR (Fellow).

Mr. H. D. Lynes (Fellow) was appointed High Sheriff of Montgomeryshire during the year.

Mr. E. M. Konstam, K.C. (Associate), was appointed a Judge of the County Court in January.

Mr. W. T. Creswell (Associate) was appointed a King's Counsel during the year.

Mr. W. P. Newman (Fellow) and Mr. E. S. W. Dale (Fellow) were elected respectively as Mayors of Hampstead and Basingstoke in November.

Mr. A. T. Powlett (Fellow) and Mr. H. Mordaunt Rogers (Fellow) were elected respectively as Presidents of the Land Agents' Society and the Auctioneers' and Estate Agents' Institute in May last.

Mr. C. H. Pritchard (Fellow) was appointed to succeed the late Mr. H. B. Napier as the representative of The Institution on the Court of the University of Bristol.

Mr. Sydney A. Kelly (Member of Council) and Mr. C. F. Elias (Fellow) have been appointed as representatives of The Institution at the Royal Sanitary Institute Congress to be held at Blackpool in July, 1933.

Mr. Thomas Adams (Fellow) was granted the Honorary Degree of Doctor of Engineering by the University of New York during the year.

Mr. F. J. Kirby (Fellow) was appointed during the year by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of the Isle of Man as an Official Arbitrator for the Island, pursuant to Public Authorities (Acquisition of Land) Act, 1923.

Mr. W. Ling Taylor (Fellow) was appointed, in December, as Assistant Commissioner to the Forestry Commissioners for England and Wales in succession to the late Mr. H. A. Pritchard, O.B.E.

By the will of the late Mr. Hyman Marks (Fellow) a sum has been bequeathed to The Institution, the income from which will be applied to the award of an annual prize at the discretion of the Council, to be known as "The Hyman Marks Prize."

The names of the following members appeared in the Birthday and New Year's Honours Lists during the period under review:—

The special object of these notes is to call attention to defects in the work of examination candidates for the year rather than to give a general synopsis of the examination work as a whole. Without entering into detail, therefore, it may be recorded that candidates showed a generally satisfactory standard of knowledge this year in the following subjects: Chemistry and Biology; Geology and Soils; Indoor Surveying and Levelling; Estate Accounts; Report (Sub-Divisions I. and II.); Law relating to Land; Law of Dilapidations; Law of Mortgages; London Building Acts; Law of Compulsory Purchase; Constructive and Working Drawings (Lower Papers); Quantities (Final, Morning Paper); Analysis of Building Prices; Mine Rents and Royalties; Support and Subsidence; Mines and Minerals; Mineral Leases.

Several examiners report carelessness in reading the questions. There were fewer comments on bad handwriting and spelling this year, but mistakes in spelling still occurred, as, for example, "affect" for "effect," and "sceptic" for "septic." One candidate, in writing on a drainage problem, used the expression "discharged the purified "affluent." There was some criticism of the lack of ability to give a clear literary exposition of ideas.

Applied Geology.—This subject largely depends on a knowledge of three things, viz.: Rocks, Minerals, and Structural Geology. These fundamentals have been insufficiently studied. The general standard in this subject is reported as very poor.

Agricultural Science.—The standard as a whole was poor; and especially so as regards knowledge of the elementary chemistry of soils and manures. Powers of field observation were not good, and an appreciation was often lacking of the relation between soil types, vegetation and styles of farming. Candidates generally had, apparently, failed to develop a power of thinking for themselves, and to understand why certain things are done in certain circumstances.

Agriculture (Practice).—The questions on the rationing of farm animals and the possibilities of the combined reaper and thresher were indifferently answered.

Forestry.—Candidates appear to have been lacking in experience out of doors, and to have given too little attention to the question of costs. Their knowledge of forest botany was again poor.

Land Drainage.—No candidate made a correct calculation of the discharge capacity of a field drain. Candidates appear to have concentrated on field drainage, and to have given too little attention to arterial drainage.

Draughtsmanship.—The standard was poor ; knowledge was lacking in such elementary matters as the number of sides to a hexagon, octagon, &c.

Farm Homesteads and Building Construction.—The standard was not satisfactory ; a fact which seems due to a general lack of practical experience among candidates in building work. Knowledge of drainage and sanitation was poor.

Construction of Buildings.—The importance of adequate support for buildings and the distribution of weight was insufficiently appreciated. Weakness was shown in important details of construction, such as the level of a damp-course, ventilation, composition of materials, size of lintels, joists, &c.

Constructive and Working Drawings.—In the higher papers both examiners report that the standard of drawing and design was poor. Too little attention appears to have been given to joinery details.

In the lower papers both examiners report an improvement in the standard of draughtsmanship. Weakness, however, was shown in brick bonding and formation of openings, elements of load distribution on to foundations, and joinery of roofing and roof coverings. Too little attention had, apparently, been given to the construction of four-panel doors, to the vital need for through ventilation under boarded floors, to details of internal and external plumbing, and the principles and rules of slating and tiling.

Drainage and Sanitation.—Generally, the knowledge of principles has improved ; but really sound knowledge of certain important matters, such as drainage, ventilation and the design of hot-water systems was, in the main, lacking. In only a few cases was it realised that a water-seal is permeable, and that water in a trap can absorb gas and emit it on the other side of the seal.

Some candidates were guilty of confusing their calculations by endeavouring to combine velocity and volume into one formula. When inspecting and reporting on a house for a prospective purchaser, some failed to realise that floors cannot be opened up and bore-holes made in their search for data ; and others were inclined to adopt the attitude of negotiators, whose duty it was to cut down the price rather than to make a technical report to their client on the sanitary condition of the premises.

The Intermediate papers were of higher quality than last year, but more attention might have been given to surveys and reports.

Steel and Reinforced Concrete Construction.—A thorough knowledge of the principles of structural mechanics is particularly essential in this subject. Superficial knowledge of formulæ, which was evident in too many cases, is dangerous. The comparatively simple principles underlying reinforced concrete formulæ were imperfectly understood.

Measurement and Valuation of Dilapidations.—Clauses in specifications were vague, and the distinction between a lease which has expired and one which has a few months to run was lost sight of by a number of candidates. Too much time was apt to be spent on single questions.

Measurement of Builder's Work.—Little use was made of the waste column, and dimensions were put down without showing how they were arrived at. Window frames in many cases were cubed instead of measured per foot run, and in some cases candidates took off the wood frame, oak cill and steel sashes in one item instead of separately.

Quantities.—The examiner in the morning paper for the Final reports that the standard reached as a whole was good. Accuracy in describing the various items, however, might be improved, and the importance of good handwriting, as a safeguard against the issue of inaccurate quantities, should be realised. In the afternoon paper for the Final there was evidence of weakness in dealing with beds of stonework so as to obtain adequate bond with the brick backing. The examiner suggests that it would be better for the slower workers to attempt to show their knowledge on each question rather than spend the greater part of their time in completing a single question.

The paper on Analysis of Building Prices was generally well done.

In the Intermediate the "working-up" was reasonably good. In "taking off" the value of side-costs and the importance of sub-headings and side-notes was not appreciated, nor was the fact that figured dimensions should be used in preference to scaling. Checking by cross-reference to items giving a similar dimension was not generally employed. More attention should be given to the setting out of work.

Economics.—The standard of work was not good. Only a few candidates appeared to have any knowledge of the Ricardian theory of rent, and fewer still were able to apply that knowledge in the two questions which called for it. Mr. Hartley Withers' book, Poverty and Wealth, should have been more widely studied, particularly as it is mentioned in the Syllabus.

Agricultural Valuations.—The application of recent important legal decisions to everyday practice was not well understood.

Valuation of Land and Buildings.—The use of valuation tables was imperfectly understood. The tables were apt to be used without due regard to the facts indicated in the questions.

Valuation of Mineral Properties.—The answers, generally, indicated a lack of knowledge of the interest tables. Some candidates failed to allow for faults and bad coal, or to make deductions for the special taxes on coal, viz., the Mineral Rights Duty and the Royalties Welfare Levy.

Mine Surveying.—Poor ; involved and laborious methods of calculation were used when simpler solutions should have been evident.

Imperial Taxation.—Less good than in previous years. Too much time was spent in working out personal allowances to the neglect of the fundamentals of property assessments.

Estate Accounts.—Good ; but some candidates failed to appreciate the importance of client's monies being recorded separately from office monies.

Surveying (Indoor).—The standard was generally good, but the questions relating to theodolite work were poorly done.

Levelling (Indoor).—Also generally good ; but the knowledge of some of the elementary facts of physics bearing on the subject was poor.

Road-making.—Disappointing ; the principles of “ time-distance,” as applied to road junctions and approaches to hills, and calculations for surface-water provision were not understood. More attention should be given to the influence of town planning, on bye-law control of street widths, and the economies in the lay-out of estate roads which are possible in consequence.

Town Planning and Building Estates.—In general, a somewhat serious unfamiliarity was shown with the provisions of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1932. Most candidates, also, were unable to differentiate between the various statutes governing road widenings and acquisition of land by public authorities. Report writing was weak. The minimum frontages required for building plots, having regard to the necessity for providing for the private car, were not realised. Candidates were apt to give too much time to single questions.

Law relating to Land.—Generally good ; but the remedy of a landlord by way of forfeiture, and the circumstances in which it is available, should have been more widely known. More attention might have been given to the over-reaching conveyance of land and its effect in simplifying the making of title.

Law of Arbitration.—Weakness was shown in knowledge of the provisions for arbitration contained in statutes and in the conduct of arbitrations.

Law of Fixtures and Dilapidations.—As compared with the knowledge shown of the law of dilapidations, which, on the whole, was satisfactory, the knowledge of the law of fixtures was poor.

Law of Landlord and Tenant.—Unsatisfactory as a whole. Want of sufficient preparation was especially shown in knowledge of the common law condition which must be satisfied before a landlord can distrain ; of the questions whether the executor of a deceased statutory tenant is protected by the Rent Restriction Acts, and whether a landlord can recover possession when the tenant sub-lets part of the premises. Some candidates thought that an unstamped or insufficiently stamped lease was an offence punishable with imprisonment.

The provisions of Section 18 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1927, and the bearing of Section 146 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, on the law as to assignments of leases without licence, "such licence not to be unreasonably withheld," proved to be stumbling-blocks in many cases.

Law of Mortgages.—General standard good ; some candidates, however, did not appear fully to understand that the manner in which monies received by a receiver must be applied depends whether the receiver was appointed under the mortgage deed, in which case the manner of application must be specified in the deed, or was appointed pursuant to Section 108 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. Most candidates, also, did not realise that a building society's remedies depended on the mortgage deed, read in conjunction with the society's rules.

Report.—The standard generally achieved by land agency and valuation candidates is described as good. Some, however, might have done better by remembering that the object of their report is to give information to a client and not to exhibit their own knowledge. The examiner in Sub-Division II. suggests that the following points might be stressed : firstly, that the report should be made a complete whole in itself, so that its story may be read at any time without reference to other papers ; secondly, that the exact purpose of the report should be stated ; thirdly, that the property to be reported upon should be adequately identified ; and fourthly, that a distinction should be made between instructions, hearsay information and personal observation.

The standard in Sub-Divisions III. and IV. was less satisfactory. In the former many candidates forgot that their report was being addressed to a lay client. Knowledge of drainage was out of date in many cases, e.g., rain water discharged into septic tank installations, and use of hopper heads to receive wastes. Mining candidates should have made a closer study of the recommendations of the Coal Mines Reorganisation Commission. These will materially affect the future letting of minerals if carried into effect.

ROYAL CHARTERS.

Royal Charters are granted by the Sovereign on the advice of the Lords of His Privy Council.

The grant of a Charter to a professional society may therefore be taken as indicating that the highest authority in the kingdom is satisfied that a high standard of professional qualification is required for membership, and that the society is in a position to advance technical knowledge, to raise and maintain the status of the profession it represents, and to provide information on subjects coming within its scope to the public advantage.

The Chartered Surveyors' Institution

(INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER)

Is established under the terms of its Royal Charters :—

1. To secure the advancement and facilitate the acquisition of that knowledge which constitutes the profession of a Surveyor, viz.—the art of determining the value of all descriptions of landed, mineral and house property, and of the various interests therein; the practice of managing and developing estates; and the science of admeasuring and delineating the physical features of the earth, and of measuring and estimating artificers' work.
2. To promote the general interests of the profession, and to maintain and extend its usefulness for the public advantage.

THE INSTITUTION was founded in 1868 under the title of The Institution of Surveyors. It was incorporated under Royal Charter in 1881, the name then being changed to The Surveyors' Institution. A further Charter was granted in 1921. In October, 1930, by permission of H.M.'s Privy Council the title of the Institution was changed to The Chartered Surveyors' Institution. Entrance examinations to qualify for membership were started in 1881, and became compulsory in 1891. The Institution was, therefore, the first professional society, other than those representing law and medicine, to initiate severe examination tests as the qualification for membership.

PRIVILEGES OF MEMBERSHIP.

Fellows and Professional Associates are permitted to place the initials F.S.I. and P.A.S.I. respectively after their names, and to use the designation "Chartered Surveyor," subject to the provisions of the By-Laws. Membership of the Institution, as indicated by the use of these letters and designation, is laid down as an essential qualification for many official and other appointments. Its value is also becoming increasingly recognised in connection with work for trustees, mortgage valuations, arbitrations, evidence before the Courts, etc.

Members, both corporate and non-corporate, have the right to attend the Ordinary General Meetings, meetings of their County Branch, and, if under 33 years of age, the Junior Meetings, and have the privilege of introducing visitors. They receive the Journal, which is issued in twelve monthly parts, and a copy of any other printed publication issued by the Institution. They may avail themselves of the Queries and Replies section of the Journal, and so secure the benefit of the knowledge and experience of fellow members in questions arising in daily practice. They may use the Library and Loan Library and the Employment Register.

The Chartered Surveyors' Benevolent Fund is established to provide for the needs of members and their dependents who, by reason of age, sickness or other unavoidable misfortune, are unable to support themselves. It is maintained entirely by voluntary contributions.

ORGANISATION AND ACTIVITIES.

The affairs of the Institution are under the management of a Council, elected annually by ballot of all corporate members. The Council are advised by the County Branches and a number of Standing and Special Committees appointed to consider the various matters referred to them. Their work includes the examination of Parliamentary Bills affecting the valuation, management, and development of landed property, and the various interests therein; the preparation of memoranda, and the submission of evidence for the use of Government Departments, Royal Commissions and departmental and other Committees in connection with matters upon which the collective knowledge of the profession would prove of assistance; and the rendering of advice to Imperial or Local Authorities when called upon to do so by statute or otherwise.

In addition to their activities in the advancement of the public interest, the Council have continually in view the elevation, ethical as well as intellectual, of the profession which they represent. In addition to the practical help which they have afforded to places of professional instruction, the foundation of scholarships and the furtherance of technical education generally, they have felt it their duty strictly to administer the rules of conduct which all members are required by the By-Laws to observe. The Council have also, through their Professional Practice Committee, used their influence in inspiring a high ideal of professional honour among members.

The Session of the Institution commences annually on the second Monday in November, and continues to the end of May. The Ordinary General Meetings are held monthly during the Session, and in addition two Meetings of members practising in Quantities are arranged. At these Meetings original papers on professional subjects are read and their merits fully and freely discussed. Every member has the privilege of introducing visitors.

THE COUNTY BRANCHES.

The organisation of the Institution includes a system of Metropolitan and County Branches, the object of which is to enable the Council to give the considered views of the profession from all parts of the country on matters of public interest; to afford opportunity for members generally to take an active part in the affairs of the Institution; and to assist the Council in ascertaining their local wants and wishes. The system includes machinery for local representation on, and succession to, the Council and Standing Committees and provides, in addition, opportunities for the discussion of professional questions and social intercourse at centres easily accessible to members in country districts. The affairs of each Metropolitan and County Branch are managed by an Executive Committee elected annually.

THE JUNIOR ORGANISATION.

The Junior Organisation was established for the benefit of the younger members of the Institution, to bring them into closer touch with the Council, and, by fostering among them an interest in professional affairs, to prepare them for higher office in the future. The work of the Junior Organisation is administered by a representative Central Executive Committee which is responsible to the Council for their affairs as a whole. Junior branches in the County Branch districts have been established in seventeen County Branch areas.

SCHOLARSHIPS AND PRIZES.

The Institution offers each year a scholarship of £100 per annum, tenable at Cambridge University for three years, in a course of study selected by the successful applicant out of several prescribed by the Council, and three one-year courses of £125, also tenable at Cambridge unless the selected candidate has applied to use his emoluments for the purpose of travel. The holder of a one-year course is required to state the direction in which he wishes to study, and to undergo such courses of lectures and instruction as may be prescribed, and to carry out an original piece of work under his supervisor's guidance. Detailed particulars of the conditions may be obtained on application to the Secretary.

A number of valuable prizes are offered in connection with the Institution Examinations.

MEMBERSHIP.

The total membership of the Institution is nearly 8,000, and consists of four classes, viz.: HONORARY MEMBERS, FELLOWS, PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATES, AND ASSOCIATES. There are also classes of PROBATIONERS and STUDENTS attached to, but not corporate members of, the Institution.

STUDENTS.—In order to qualify for admission to the Class of Students, candidates must be between the ages of 18 and 21, must have passed either the Preliminary Examination of the Institution or one of the specified Examinations accepted in lieu thereof, and must be either (1) pupils or technical assistants in the offices of members of the Institution or other persons substantially engaged in one or other of the branches of the profession as defined above; or (2) studying with a view to entering the profession at such places of professional instruction as the Council may approve.

Candidates under the age of 21 are advised to become Students; for, in addition to the use of the Library and Loan Library, they secure the Journal and are entitled to attend meetings.

Students remain attached to their class until the end of the calendar year in which they attain the age of 21, and may then be enrolled in the class of Probationers.

PROBATIONERS are persons whose period of Studentship has expired or who have passed the Intermediate Examination. They may continue as Probationers until the end of the calendar year during which they shall have been for five years enrolled in that class, or until the end of the third calendar year after that in which they passed the Intermediate Examination, whichever period first terminates.

All candidates for the Intermediate Examination are required to give an undertaking that, if successful in passing, they will forthwith become Probationers and so remain for the full term allowed by the By-Laws.

Probationers are entitled to use the Library and Loan Library, to attend meetings and to receive the publications.

PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATES.—Candidates desirous of election to the class of Professional Associates must be not less than 21 years of age, and must have passed the Preliminary Examination (or an examination accepted in lieu thereof) and the Intermediate and Final Examinations. Candidates holding a University degree in subjects approved by the Council as appertaining to the surveying profession may take a single examination in place of the Intermediate and Final. After passing the examinations, candidates are eligible for election to the class of Professional Associates, provided that they are no longer in statu pupillari and are actually engaged in professional work as Surveyors.

Holders of the B.A. and B.Sc. degrees in Estate Management, granted respectively by the Universities of Cambridge and London, may be elected as Professional Associates without examination on satisfying the Council that they are engaged in professional work and have received proper practical training in the profession.

FELLOWS.—Candidates must be not less than 30 years of age, must have passed either (1) the Preliminary or an exempting examination and the Intermediate and Final Examinations, or

(2) the Direct Fellowship Examination ; and must have held for five years, and be holding, a position of complete responsibility equivalent to that of a principal in an established business.

There are special arrangements for the election of Colonial Fellows.

ASSOCIATES must be persons over 21 years of age, not Surveyors by profession, whose pursuits are such as to qualify them to co-operate with Surveyors in the advancement of professional knowledge.

HONORARY MEMBERS must be persons who, either by reason of their position or experience, or their eminence in science, may be enabled to render assistance in promoting the objects of the Institution ; but are not engaged in practice as Surveyors in Great Britain or Ireland. They have the privilege of being present and taking part in all Ordinary General Meetings, and of access to the Library, but no right of voting, discussing or otherwise interfering in the affairs of the Institution ; nor are they called upon to contribute to its funds.

ELECTION TO MEMBERSHIP, other than Honorary Membership, is by ballot of all the corporate members of the Institution. All Fellows, Professional Associates and Associates are required, within twelve months of their election, to attend an Ordinary General Meeting, or, in the case of members residing at a distance from London, a meeting of their County Branch, for the purpose of formal introduction, and to sign the Register. They are also required, within the same period, to deliver to the Council an original paper on a subject connected with the profession, or to make a donation to the Library Fund.

EXAMINATIONS.

THE PRELIMINARY AND SPECIAL EXAMINATIONS.—Any candidate intending to follow the profession of Surveyor will be accepted on application, but acceptance for the Preliminary Examination does not imply that a candidate, if successful in passing, will necessarily be regarded as eligible for enrolment as a Student, or for admission to the Intermediate and Final Examinations. There are no age limits, but candidates over the age of 25 are permitted to sit for a special Examination, instead of the Preliminary, to test their general knowledge and education. The entrance fee for the examination is £1 11s. 6d.

THE INTERMEDIATE EXAMINATION.—A Candidate, unless studying at a recognised place of instruction, must be a pupil or technical assistant* in the office of a member of the Institution or other person substantially engaged in the profession of Surveyor as defined above. The entrance fee for the Examination is £5 5s. od.

A Candidate taking Part I only of the Intermediate Examination may do so before reaching the age of 19, provided he has passed the Preliminary (or exempting) examination.

A Candidate taking Part II of the examination, either with or without Part I, must not be less than 19 years of age at the date of the examination. No exception to this rule will be made.

THE FINAL EXAMINATION is open to candidates who have passed the Intermediate Examination; the entrance fee is £5 5s. od.

THE DIRECT FELLOWSHIP EXAMINATION.—Candidates for this Examination must be more than 30 years of age, and their position must be such as would make them eligible for direct election as Fellows on passing the Examination. The entrance fee is £5 5s. od.

The Preliminary and Special Examinations are held annually in January, and the Intermediate, Final and Direct Fellowship Examinations in March. Applications to sit for any one of the Examinations must be on the prescribed forms and must be submitted, together with the examination fees, during the previous September.

The Intermediate, Final, and Direct Fellowship Examinations are divided into four Sub-Divisions, to cover the four main branches into which the profession may roughly be divided, viz. :—I., Chiefly Land Agency; II., Chiefly Valuation; III., Chiefly Building or Quantities; and IV., Chiefly Mining. Candidates may elect to be examined in any one of these sub-divisions, but those proceeding to the Final Examination after passing the Intermediate must do so in the same sub-division.

THE SPECIAL SINGLE EXAMINATION for holders of University degrees in a course of study approved by the Council as bearing upon the profession, is held concurrently with the other professional examinations, and combines the subjects required to be taken in both the Intermediate and Final. Entrance fee £5 5s.

Copies of the rules governing the examinations and giving full particulars thereof, may be obtained from the Secretary on application. The detailed Syllabus and List of Text-Books (which relates to the professional examinations only) can be obtained at a charge of 1s., and past examination papers at 2s. for each annual set.

\ Articles, although much to be recommended as a method of training for the profession, are not an essential condition of admission to the Examinations.*

THE LIBRARY AND COLLECTIONS.

The Institution Library contains approximately 12,000 volumes, and includes a topographical section comprising the great County Histories, all the principal local histories, and a London collection; a series of works on British Agriculture, both ancient and modern, and the allied subjects of Forestry, Geology, Botany, Agricultural Chemistry and Vegetable Physiology; a complete series of professional text-books, including the latest works; works of general science; the Public General Statutes from the earliest times; Law Reports and Law Text-Books: Parliamentary Papers and Reports; the Transactions of kindred societies and general works of reference. It also contains a complete set of the Regional Planning Schemes; all the Town Planning Schemes which so far have been approved by the Minister; a number of valuable single works and rare editions of special interest to the book-lover, as well as a collection of old maps, charts and plans.

The Loan Library is independent of the General Reference Library, and contains some 1,600 volumes, including all the principal professional text-books, which may be borrowed by members according to the prescribed rules.

The Forestry Collection contains a series of home-grown timber exhibits in planks and sections; preserved specimens of the foliage, flowers and fruit of the more common British trees and of timber insects, injurious and otherwise; and a collection of saws, tools and other implements used in forestry. Various causes of damage to timber and the commercial uses to which British woods may be put, are also illustrated.

The Geological Museum includes specimens of the fossils found in British geological formations and a collection of stones used in building.

CODE OF CONDUCT FOR OBSERVANCE BY CHARTERED SURVEYORS.

Care should be taken that the form and phraseology of all advertisements, circulars, or letters issued by Chartered Surveyors, whether in the Press or by other means, are not such as would be liable to lower the status of the Institution in the estimation of other professional men or of the public.

A.—CIRCULARS AND LETTERS.

The work of a surveyor may conveniently be divided under two heads, (1) that which is purely professional in character, and (2) the sale or letting of property in connection with which a certain amount of the commercial element is introduced.

(1) Professional Work.

Chartered Surveyors shall not address, except to clients, circulars or letters soliciting instructions for professional work.

This rule does not apply to the issue of circulars or letters for the purpose of making known the opening of a new firm or branch office, changes of address, or alterations in the partnership or constitution of a firm.

(2) Sales and Lettings.

The prohibition referred to in (1) Professional Work does not apply to letters addressed to owners inviting instructions for the sale of a property provided that :—

- (a) Where the property is under the management of a regular agent or is in the hands of a sole agent, whose name is reasonably ascertainable, the letter is addressed to such person ; or
- (b) The letter contains a statement that if another surveyor or agent is regularly employed by the recipient, it should be either disregarded or passed on to such person.

B.—CANVASSING BY PERSONAL CALL.

Should not be permitted to a Chartered Surveyor or a member of his staff.

C.—ADVERTISEMENTS.

- (i) Press advertisements of future sales and lettings, and dates of sales, etc., are permitted.
- (ii) Card advertisements in the Press setting out the title and address of a firm, the qualifications of its partners, and accompanied by a short statement of the branch or branches of the profession in which they practise, are permitted.
- (iii) General advertisements by board, poster, etc., of future sales and lettings, and dates of sales, etc., are permitted.
- (iv) Poster advertisements of the card type, setting out the title and address of the firm, the qualifications of the partners, and the branch or branches in which they practise, exhibited on boards or spaces belonging to or regularly occupied by the firm and usually employed for the advertisement of sales and lettings, are permitted. Advertisements of this nature, exhibited on walls, hoardings and other places commonly used for commercial advertisements, are not permitted.
- (v) The exhibition of card type advertisements of this nature on a cinema screen or in any other place of public entertainment is not permitted.

D.—CHARGES.

- (i) The Institution Schedule of Charges should be looked upon as an indication of what would be considered a reasonable fee in ordinary and average circumstances. No Member of the Institution is permitted to compete with other surveyors by quoting fees which would be unfair to them.

- (ii) An offer to accept instructions for professional work on the basis that no fee will be charged unless a successful result is attained, would be looked upon as unprofessional.

E.—LIMITED LIABILITY COMPANIES.

Chartered Surveyors must accept full liability for advice given to clients on professional matters. On these grounds, they will not in future be permitted to convert their firms into limited liability companies unless special circumstances approved by the Council exist.

F.—TAX COLLECTIONS.

Chartered Surveyors are not permitted to accept appointment as or undertake the duties of collectors of income tax.

G.—SUNDAY OPENING OF OFFICES.

In the absence of special circumstances approved by the Council the opening of offices on Sunday for general business with the public should be looked upon as objectionable.

H.—Chartered Surveyors will be held responsible for the acts of members of their staffs so far as they relate to matters coming within the scope of their practice.

ADDENDUM.

Chartered Surveyors are reminded of the following rules set out in By-law 24, which are deemed to be fundamental :—

- (1) A Member shall not engage in or be connected with any occupation which in the opinion of the Council is inconsistent with the profession of a Surveyor.
- (2) A Member shall not directly or indirectly allow or agree to allow of participation by any Solicitor or his representative, or by any accountant or liquidator, or by any of their clerks, in his charges for professional work.
- (3) A Member shall not accept or give any illicit or secret trade or other discounts, commission or allowance, in connection with any works the execution of which he may be engaged to superintend, or with any other professional business which may be entrusted to him, or any goods he may order on behalf of clients.

The Council rely upon Members of the Institution to conform to these rules, which are framed for their general advantage and that of the public. Members contravening them will render themselves liable to be dealt with under the powers vested in the Council by the By-laws, although it is hoped that the cases in which a reminder of the requirements is insufficient may be exceptional.

PRETING THE SCALE OF CHARGES.

The Chartered Quantity Surveyor in practice is governed by established customs accepted and observed by the Surveying profession, and more particularly by the Charter and By-laws of the Institution which render him liable in the case of unprofessional conduct to reprimand, suspension, or expulsion at the discretion of the Council.

A Quantity Surveyor is remunerated solely by his professional fees, and is debarred from any other source of remuneration in connection with the works and duties entrusted to him. A Quantity Surveyor must not accept any work which involves the giving or receiving of any discounts, gifts, or commissions whatsoever.

Quantity Surveyors may not compete with another on the basis of fees, and Chartered Quantity Surveyors must take reasonable precautions not to contravene the principle, e.g. by an intimation to the prospective client that if other surveyors are being asked to quote in competition, the offer of services is withdrawn.
